

SOLVED PRACTICE WORKBOOK

Integration of the Tribals & National Unity (1947-1987) - Learner-v2 Refreshed

UPSC complete learning session | Foundation to advanced | Concepts, evidence, practice and answer writing

Integration of the Tribals & National Unity (1947–1987) REFRESHED TEACHING NAVIGATION — BASIC/CORE FIRST
01 FOUNDATION — WHO AND HOW MANY: THE 1971 CENSUS BASELINE Mains: Open a tribal-policy answer with the attributed baseline and	02 FOUNDATION — COLONIAL DISPOSSESSION: MONEY-LENDERS, LAND AND FOREST LAW Name the mechanism rather than gesturing at 'exploitation': debt,
03 FOUNDATION — VERRIER ELWIN AND THE MAKING OF THE POLICY Core claim: Policy was made with an intellectual influence attached to	04 CORE — THE TWO APPROACHES NEHRU REJECTED Mains: A 10-mark answer on the Panchsheel is complete if it names
05 CORE — INTEGRATION WITH IDENTITY: THE TWO PARAMETERS Precise definition: The two parameters are the paired conditions that	06 CORE — THE FIVE GUIDELINES LATER LABELLED THE TRIBAL PANCHSHEEL 'Tribal Panchsheel' is a later label for these five broad guidelines, and
07 CORE — ARTICLE 46 AND THE PROTECTIVE MACHINERY Core claim: The Constitution converted the policy into enforceable	08 CORE — FIFTH SCHEDULE AND SIXTH SCHEDULE: TWO PROBLEMS, TWO The two Schedules are never interchangeable, the Sixth Schedule and
09 CORE — THE IMPLEMENTATION SHORTFALL BEHIND CONSTITUTIONAL INTENT Attribute the failure to implementation, neglect, capture and	10 CORE — WHY THE NORTH-EAST WAS A DIFFERENT PROBLEM Mains: This session answers the 'why did the North-East need a
11 CORE — NEFA FROM 1948 AND THE SIXTH SCHEDULE IN PRACTICE Precise definition: NEFA from 1948 was a specially administered Union	12 CORE — NAGALAND: THE 1955 DECLARATION, THE ARMY IN EARLY 1956 AND STATEHOOD IN Once the back of the armed rebellion was broken by the middle of
13 CORE SYNTHESIS — FROM A LANGUAGE TRIGGER TO THE REORGANISATION OF 1972 Precise definition: The 1972 reorganisation of the North-East is the	14 CORE SYNTHESIS — MIZORAM: MARCH 1966, UNION TERRITORY IN 1973, ACCORD IN 1986, Mizoram is the model case of the accommodation strategy, and it
15 CORE SYNTHESIS — JHARKHAND: FROM A TRIBAL STATE TO A REGIONAL DEMAND The Jharkhand Mukti Morcha, formed in late 1972 with Shibu Soren

Original deterministic study visual; labels are explanatory, not textual quotations.

Source order: repository knowledge -> official current linkage -> clearly marked analysis. No fabricated PYQs or statistics.

CONTENTS / WORKBOOK INDEX

Major learning parts and meaningful subtopics are listed in document order. Page numbers are generated from the final PDF layout; PDF bookmarks mirror the same hierarchy.

Integration of the Tribals & National Unity (1947-1987) - Solved Practice Workbook 6

BASIC MCQS / REMEDIATION 6

Q1. Which statement correctly identifies Scale of the tribal population on the 1971 Census?	6
Q2. Which chronology card should be filed under Scale of the tribal population on the 1971 Census?	6
Q3. Which option should a candidate retain when revising Scale of the tribal population on the 1971 Census?	7
Q4. Which statement avoids a common matching trap about Scale of the tribal population on the 1971 Census?	7
Q5. Which statement correctly identifies A minority everywhere except in the North-East?	8
Q6. Which chronology card should be filed under A minority everywhere except in the North-East?	8
Q7. Which option should a candidate retain when revising A minority everywhere except in the North-East?	9
Q8. Which statement avoids a common matching trap about A minority everywhere except in the North-East?	9
Q9. Which statement correctly identifies Colonial erosion of tribal isolation?	10
Q10. Which chronology card should be filed under Colonial erosion of tribal isolation?	10
Q11. Which option should a candidate retain when revising Colonial erosion of tribal isolation?	11
Q12. Which statement avoids a common matching trap about Colonial erosion of tribal isolation?	11
Q13. Which statement correctly identifies Forest law and the tradition of revolt?	12
Q14. Which chronology card should be filed under Forest law and the tradition of revolt?	13
Q15. Which option should a candidate retain when revising Forest law and the tradition of revolt?	13
Q16. Which statement avoids a common matching trap about Forest law and the tradition of revolt?	14
Q17. Which statement correctly identifies Verrier Elwin and integration without imposition?	15
Q18. Which chronology card should be filed under Verrier Elwin and integration without imposition?	15
Q19. Which option should a candidate retain when revising Verrier Elwin and integration without imposition?	16
Q20. Which statement avoids a common matching trap about Verrier Elwin and integration without imposition?	16
Q21. Which statement correctly identifies The two approaches Nehru rejected?	17
Q22. Which chronology card should be filed under The two approaches Nehru rejected?	18
Q23. Which option should a candidate retain when revising The two approaches Nehru rejected?	18
Q24. Which statement avoids a common matching trap about The two approaches Nehru rejected?	19
Q25. Which statement correctly identifies Integration with identity and the two parameters?	20
Q26. Which chronology card should be filed under Integration with identity and the two parameters?	20
Q27. Which option should a candidate retain when revising Integration with identity and the two parameters?	21

Q28. Which statement avoids a common matching trap about Integration with identity and the two parameters?	21
Q29. Which statement correctly identifies The five guidelines later labelled the Tribal Panchsheel?	22
Q30. Which chronology card should be filed under The five guidelines later labelled the Tribal Panchsheel?	23
Q31. Which option should a candidate retain when revising The five guidelines later labelled the Tribal Panchsheel?	23
Q32. Which statement avoids a common matching trap about The five guidelines later labelled the Tribal Panchsheel?	24
Q33. Which statement correctly identifies Article 46 and the protective machinery?	25
Q34. Which chronology card should be filed under Article 46 and the protective machinery?	26
Q35. Which option should a candidate retain when revising Article 46 and the protective machinery?	26
Q36. Which statement avoids a common matching trap about Article 46 and the protective machinery?	27
Q37. Which statement correctly identifies Fifth Schedule and Sixth Schedule as different instruments?	28
Q38. Which chronology card should be filed under Fifth Schedule and Sixth Schedule as different instruments?	28
Q39. Which option should a candidate retain when revising Fifth Schedule and Sixth Schedule as different instruments?	29
Q40. Which statement avoids a common matching trap about Fifth Schedule and Sixth Schedule as different instruments?	30
Q41. Which statement correctly identifies The implementation shortfall behind constitutional intent?	30
Q42. Which chronology card should be filed under The implementation shortfall behind constitutional intent?	31
Q43. Which option should a candidate retain when revising The implementation shortfall behind constitutional intent?	32
Q44. Which statement avoids a common matching trap about The implementation shortfall behind constitutional intent?	32
Q45. Which statement correctly identifies Why the North-East was a different problem?	33
Q46. Which chronology card should be filed under Why the North-East was a different problem?	34
Q47. Which option should a candidate retain when revising Why the North-East was a different problem?	34
Q48. Which statement avoids a common matching trap about Why the North-East was a different problem?	35
Q49. Which statement correctly identifies NEFA from 1948 and the Sixth Schedule in practice?	36
Q50. Which chronology card should be filed under NEFA from 1948 and the Sixth Schedule in practice?	36
Q51. Which option should a candidate retain when revising NEFA from 1948 and the Sixth Schedule in practice?	37
Q52. Which statement avoids a common matching trap about NEFA from 1948 and the Sixth Schedule in practice?	38
Q53. Which statement correctly identifies The Naga declaration of 1955 and the two-track response?	38
Q54. Which chronology card should be filed under The Naga declaration of 1955 and the two-track response?	39
Q55. Which option should a candidate retain when revising The Naga declaration of 1955 and the two-track response?	40
Q56. Which statement avoids a common matching trap about The Naga declaration of 1955 and the two-track response?	40
Q57. Which statement correctly identifies From the army in early 1956 to Nagaland in 1963?	41
Q58. Which chronology card should be filed under From the army in early 1956 to Nagaland in 1963?	42
Q59. Which option should a candidate retain when revising From the army in early 1956 to Nagaland in 1963?	43

Q60. Which statement avoids a common matching trap about From the army in early 1956 to Nagaland in 1963?	43
Q61. Which statement correctly identifies The hill-state demand, the language trigger and Meghalaya in 1969?	44
Q62. Which chronology card should be filed under The hill-state demand, the language trigger and Meghalaya in 1969?	45
Q63. Which option should a candidate retain when revising The hill-state demand, the language trigger and Meghalaya in 1969?	46
Q64. Which statement avoids a common matching trap about The hill-state demand, the language trigger and Meghalaya in 1969?	46
Q65. Which statement correctly identifies The reorganisation of the North-East in 1972?	47
Q66. Which chronology card should be filed under The reorganisation of the North-East in 1972?	48
Q67. Which option should a candidate retain when revising The reorganisation of the North-East in 1972?	48
Q68. Which statement avoids a common matching trap about The reorganisation of the North-East in 1972?	49
Q69. Which statement correctly identifies The Mizo uprising, Union Territory in 1973 and statehood in February 1987?	49
Q70. Which chronology card should be filed under The Mizo uprising, Union Territory in 1973 and statehood in February 1987?	50
Q71. Which option should a candidate retain when revising The Mizo uprising, Union Territory in 1973 and statehood in February 1987?	51
Q72. Which statement avoids a common matching trap about The Mizo uprising, Union Territory in 1973 and statehood in February 1987?	52
Q73. Which statement correctly identifies The Jharkhand Party from 1950 and its 32 seats in 1952?	53
Q74. Which chronology card should be filed under The Jharkhand Party from 1950 and its 32 seats in 1952?	53
Q75. Which option should a candidate retain when revising The Jharkhand Party from 1950 and its 32 seats in 1952?	54
Q76. Which statement avoids a common matching trap about The Jharkhand Party from 1950 and its 32 seats in 1952?	55
Q77. Which statement correctly identifies The demographic turn to a regional demand?	55
Q78. Which chronology card should be filed under The demographic turn to a regional demand?	56
Q79. Which option should a candidate retain when revising The demographic turn to a regional demand?	56
Q80. Which statement avoids a common matching trap about The demographic turn to a regional demand?	57

PYQS AND ANSWER PRACTICE 58

TRANSPARENT ZERO-DIRECT-PYQ AUDIT	58
PYQ DEMAND CARD 1 - 2023 Mains GS-I Q13	58
PYQ DEMAND CARD 2 - 2021 Mains GS-I Q9	58
PYQ DEMAND CARD 3 - 2022 Mains GS-I Q10	58
ORIGINAL MAINS 1 - 10 MARKS	59
ORIGINAL MAINS 2 - 10 MARKS	59
ORIGINAL MAINS 3 - 15 MARKS	60
ORIGINAL MAINS 4 - 15 MARKS	61

ORIGINAL MAINS 5 - 20 MARKS 62

ORIGINAL MAINS 6 - 20 MARKS 63

Integration of the Tribals & National Unity (1947-1987) - Solved Practice Workbook

BASIC MCQS / REMEDIATION

Q1. Which statement correctly identifies Scale of the tribal population on the 1971 Census?

A. The 1971 Census recorded over 400 tribal communities numbering nearly 38 million people and constituting nearly 6.9 per cent of the Indian population, with the greatest concentrations in Madhya Pradesh, Bihar, Orissa, north-eastern India, West Bengal, Maharashtra, Gujarat and Rajasthan; these figures must always carry the 1971 Census attribution and must never be presented as 1951 figures or as current data, and no contemporary tribal statistic may be substituted for them. B. Colonialism brought a radical transformation as the tribals' relative isolation was eroded by the penetration of market forces and by integration into British and princely administrations, and money-lenders, traders, revenue farmers, middlemen and petty officials invaded tribal areas until families were engulfed in debt and lost their land to outsiders, many being reduced to agricultural labourers, sharecroppers and rack-rented tenants while belated legislation against land alienation failed to halt the process. C. To conserve forests and to facilitate their commercial exploitation the colonial authorities brought large tracts under forest laws that forbade shifting cultivation and severely restricted tribal use of the forest and access to its products, and the combination of land loss, indebtedness, exploitation by middlemen and extortion by police and forest officials produced a series of nineteenth- and twentieth-century uprisings including the Santhal uprising and the Munda rebellion led by Birsa Munda, and drew tribal people into the national and peasant movements. D. Except in the North-East the tribal communities constituted minorities in their own home states, and this single demographic asymmetry explains why the republic needed two different constitutional instruments: self-government where a community was territorially dominant, and protective regulation where it was a dispersed minority among non-tribal neighbours.

Answer: A. Explanation: The 1971 Census recorded over 400 tribal communities numbering nearly 38 million people and constituting nearly 6.9 per cent of the Indian population, with the greatest concentrations in Madhya Pradesh, Bihar, Orissa, north-eastern India, West Bengal, Maharashtra, Gujarat and Rajasthan; these figures must always carry the 1971 Census attribution and must never be presented as 1951 figures or as current data, and no contemporary tribal statistic may be substituted for them. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q2. Which chronology card should be filed under Scale of the tribal population on the 1971 Census?

A. Colonialism brought a radical transformation as the tribals' relative isolation was eroded by the penetration of market forces and by integration into British and princely administrations, and money-lenders, traders, revenue farmers, middlemen and petty officials invaded tribal areas until families were engulfed in debt and lost their land to outsiders, many being reduced to agricultural labourers, sharecroppers and rack-rented tenants while belated legislation against land alienation failed to halt the process. B. The 1971 Census recorded over 400 tribal communities numbering nearly 38 million people and constituting nearly 6.9 per cent of the Indian population, with the greatest concentrations in Madhya Pradesh, Bihar, Orissa, north-eastern India, West Bengal, Maharashtra, Gujarat and Rajasthan; these figures must always carry the 1971 Census attribution and must never be presented as 1951 figures or as current data, and no contemporary tribal statistic may be substituted for them. C. Verrier Elwin, who lived nearly all his life among the tribal people of central and north-eastern India, was one of the formative influences on the new government's policies and recorded that under British rule tribal people suffered oppression and exploitation as merchants and liquor-vendors cajoled, tricked and swindled them until their broad acres dwindled; his influence underwrote a policy of integration without imposition rather than a policy of rescue or of tutelage. D. To conserve forests and to facilitate their commercial exploitation the colonial authorities brought large tracts under forest laws that forbade shifting cultivation and severely restricted tribal use of the forest and access to its products, and the combination of land loss, indebtedness, exploitation by middlemen and extortion by police and forest officials produced a series of nineteenth- and twentieth-century uprisings including the Santhal uprising and the Munda rebellion led by Birsa Munda, and drew tribal people into the national and peasant movements.

Answer: B. Explanation: The 1971 Census recorded over 400 tribal communities numbering nearly 38 million people and constituting nearly 6.9 per cent of the Indian population, with the greatest concentrations in Madhya Pradesh, Bihar, Orissa, north-eastern India, West Bengal, Maharashtra, Gujarat and Rajasthan; these figures must always carry the 1971 Census attribution and must never be presented as 1951 figures or as current data, and no contemporary tribal statistic may be substituted for them. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q3. Which option should a candidate retain when revising Scale of the tribal population on the 1971 Census?

A. Two approaches were on offer - leaving the tribal people alone and uncontaminated by outside influences, and assimilating them as completely and quickly as possible into the surrounding society - and Nehru rejected both: he called the first the treatment of tribal people as museum specimens to be observed and written about, which was to insult them and was in any case impossible because penetration had gone too far, and he rejected the second because being engulfed by the masses of Indian humanity would destroy the tribals' social and cultural identity and let unscrupulous outsiders take possession of their land and forests. B. Verrier Elwin, who lived nearly all his life among the tribal people of central and north-eastern India, was one of the formative influences on the new government's policies and recorded that under British rule tribal people suffered oppression and exploitation as merchants and liquor-vendors cajoled, tricked and swindled them until their broad acres dwindled; his influence underwrote a policy of integration without imposition rather than a policy of rescue or of tutelage. C. The 1971 Census recorded over 400 tribal communities numbering nearly 38 million people and constituting nearly 6.9 per cent of the Indian population, with the greatest concentrations in Madhya Pradesh, Bihar, Orissa, north-eastern India, West Bengal, Maharashtra, Gujarat and Rajasthan; these figures must always carry the 1971 Census attribution and must never be presented as 1951 figures or as current data, and no contemporary tribal statistic may be substituted for them. D. To conserve forests and to facilitate their commercial exploitation the colonial authorities brought large tracts under forest laws that forbade shifting cultivation and severely restricted tribal use of the forest and access to its products, and the combination of land loss, indebtedness, exploitation by middlemen and extortion by police and forest officials produced a series of nineteenth- and twentieth-century uprisings including the Santhal uprising and the Munda rebellion led by Birsa Munda, and drew tribal people into the national and peasant movements.

Answer: C. Explanation: The 1971 Census recorded over 400 tribal communities numbering nearly 38 million people and constituting nearly 6.9 per cent of the Indian population, with the greatest concentrations in Madhya Pradesh, Bihar, Orissa, north-eastern India, West Bengal, Maharashtra, Gujarat and Rajasthan; these figures must always carry the 1971 Census attribution and must never be presented as 1951 figures or as current data, and no contemporary tribal statistic may be substituted for them. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q4. Which statement avoids a common matching trap about Scale of the tribal population on the 1971 Census?

A. Verrier Elwin, who lived nearly all his life among the tribal people of central and north-eastern India, was one of the formative influences on the new government's policies and recorded that under British rule tribal people suffered oppression and exploitation as merchants and liquor-vendors cajoled, tricked and swindled them until their broad acres dwindled; his influence underwrote a policy of integration without imposition rather than a policy of rescue or of tutelage. B. Nehru's alternative was integration: making the tribal people an integral part of the Indian nation while maintaining their distinct identity and culture, on two parameters that had to be held together - the tribal areas have to progress, and they have to progress in their own way - with progress meaning something other than an attempt merely to duplicate what existed elsewhere in India and with whatever changes were needed to be worked out by the tribals themselves. C. Two approaches were on offer - leaving the tribal people alone and uncontaminated by outside influences, and assimilating them as completely and quickly as possible into the surrounding society - and Nehru rejected both: he called the first the treatment of tribal people as museum specimens to be observed and written about, which was to insult them and was in any case impossible because penetration had gone too far, and he rejected the second because being engulfed by the masses of Indian humanity would destroy the tribals' social and cultural identity and let unscrupulous outsiders take possession of their land and forests. D. The 1971 Census recorded over 400 tribal communities numbering nearly 38 million people and constituting nearly 6.9 per cent of the Indian population, with the greatest concentrations in Madhya Pradesh, Bihar, Orissa, north-eastern India, West Bengal, Maharashtra, Gujarat and Rajasthan; these figures must always carry the 1971 Census attribution and must never be presented as 1951 figures or as current data, and no contemporary tribal statistic may be substituted for them.

Answer: D. Explanation: The 1971 Census recorded over 400 tribal communities numbering nearly 38 million people and constituting nearly 6.9 per cent of the Indian population, with the greatest concentrations in Madhya Pradesh, Bihar, Orissa, north-eastern India, West Bengal, Maharashtra, Gujarat and Rajasthan; these figures must always carry the 1971 Census attribution and must never be presented as 1951 figures or as current data, and no contemporary tribal statistic may be substituted for them. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q5. Which statement correctly identifies A minority everywhere except in the North-East?

A. Except in the North-East the tribal communities constituted minorities in their own home states, and this single demographic asymmetry explains why the republic needed two different constitutional instruments: self-government where a community was territorially dominant, and protective regulation where it was a dispersed minority among non-tribal neighbours. B. Colonialism brought a radical transformation as the tribals' relative isolation was eroded by the penetration of market forces and by integration into British and princely administrations, and money-lenders, traders, revenue farmers, middlemen and petty officials invaded tribal areas until families were engulfed in debt and lost their land to outsiders, many being reduced to agricultural labourers, sharecroppers and rack-rented tenants while belated legislation against land alienation failed to halt the process. C. To conserve forests and to facilitate their commercial exploitation the colonial authorities brought large tracts under forest laws that forbade shifting cultivation and severely restricted tribal use of the forest and access to its products, and the combination of land loss, indebtedness, exploitation by middlemen and extortion by police and forest officials produced a series of nineteenth- and twentieth-century uprisings including the Santhal uprising and the Munda rebellion led by Birsa Munda, and drew tribal people into the national and peasant movements. D. Verrier Elwin, who lived nearly all his life among the tribal people of central and north-eastern India, was one of the formative influences on the new government's policies and recorded that under British rule tribal people suffered oppression and exploitation as merchants and liquor-vendors cajoled, tricked and swindled them until their broad acres dwindled; his influence underwrote a policy of integration without imposition rather than a policy of rescue or of tutelage.

Answer: A. Explanation: Except in the North-East the tribal communities constituted minorities in their own home states, and this single demographic asymmetry explains why the republic needed two different constitutional instruments: self-government where a community was territorially dominant, and protective regulation where it was a dispersed minority among non-tribal neighbours. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q6. Which chronology card should be filed under A minority everywhere except in the North-East?

A. Two approaches were on offer - leaving the tribal people alone and uncontaminated by outside influences, and assimilating them as completely and quickly as possible into the surrounding society - and Nehru rejected both: he called the first the treatment of tribal people as museum specimens to be observed and written about, which was to insult them and was in any case impossible because penetration had gone too far, and he rejected the second because being engulfed by the masses of Indian humanity would destroy the tribals' social and cultural identity and let unscrupulous outsiders take possession of their land and forests. B. Except in the North-East the tribal communities constituted minorities in their own home states, and this single demographic asymmetry explains why the republic needed two different constitutional instruments: self-government where a community was territorially dominant, and protective regulation where it was a dispersed minority among non-tribal neighbours. C. To conserve forests and to facilitate their commercial exploitation the colonial authorities brought large tracts under forest laws that forbade shifting cultivation and severely restricted tribal use of the forest and access to its products, and the combination of land loss, indebtedness, exploitation by middlemen and extortion by police and forest officials produced a series of nineteenth- and twentieth-century uprisings including the Santhal uprising and the Munda rebellion led by Birsa Munda, and drew tribal people into the national and peasant movements. D. Verrier Elwin, who lived nearly all his life among the tribal people of central and north-eastern India, was one of the formative influences on the new government's policies and recorded that under British rule tribal people suffered oppression and exploitation as merchants and liquor-vendors cajoled, tricked and swindled them until their broad acres dwindled; his influence underwrote a policy of integration without imposition rather than a policy of rescue or of tutelage.

Answer: B. Explanation: Except in the North-East the tribal communities constituted minorities in their own home states, and this single demographic asymmetry explains why the republic needed two different constitutional instruments: self-government where a community was territorially dominant, and protective regulation where it was a dispersed minority among non-tribal neighbours. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q7. Which option should a candidate retain when revising A minority everywhere except in the North-East?

A. Verrier Elwin, who lived nearly all his life among the tribal people of central and north-eastern India, was one of the formative influences on the new government's policies and recorded that under British rule tribal people suffered oppression and exploitation as merchants and liquor-vendors cajoled, tricked and swindled them until their broad acres dwindled; his influence underwrote a policy of integration without imposition rather than a policy of rescue or of tutelage. B. Two approaches were on offer - leaving the tribal people alone and uncontaminated by outside influences, and assimilating them as completely and quickly as possible into the surrounding society - and Nehru rejected both: he called the first the treatment of tribal people as museum specimens to be observed and written about, which was to insult them and was in any case impossible because penetration had gone too far, and he rejected the second because being engulfed by the masses of Indian humanity would destroy the tribals' social and cultural identity and let unscrupulous outsiders take possession of their land and forests. C. Except in the North-East the tribal communities constituted minorities in their own home states, and this single demographic asymmetry explains why the republic needed two different constitutional instruments: self-government where a community was territorially dominant, and protective regulation where it was a dispersed minority among non-tribal neighbours. D. Nehru's alternative was integration: making the tribal people an integral part of the Indian nation while maintaining their distinct identity and culture, on two parameters that had to be held together - the tribal areas have to progress, and they have to progress in their own way - with progress meaning something other than an attempt merely to duplicate what existed elsewhere in India and with whatever changes were needed to be worked out by the tribals themselves.

Answer: C. Explanation: Except in the North-East the tribal communities constituted minorities in their own home states, and this single demographic asymmetry explains why the republic needed two different constitutional instruments: self-government where a community was territorially dominant, and protective regulation where it was a dispersed minority among non-tribal neighbours. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q8. Which statement avoids a common matching trap about A minority everywhere except in the North-East?

A. Nehru laid down five broad guidelines for government policy: tribal people should develop along the lines of their own genius with no imposition or compulsion from outside and no superiority complex among non-tribals; tribal rights in land and forest should be respected and no outsider should be able to take possession of tribal land; tribal languages should be encouraged and the conditions for their flourishing safeguarded; administration should rely on the tribal people themselves with administrators recruited and trained from among them and as few outsiders as possible; and there should be no over-administration of tribal areas. 'Tribal Panchsheel' is a later label for these guidelines and no exact proclamation year may be attached to it. B. Nehru's alternative was integration: making the tribal people an integral part of the Indian nation while maintaining their distinct identity and culture, on two parameters that had to be held together - the tribal areas have to progress, and they have to progress in their own way - with progress meaning something other than an attempt merely to duplicate what existed elsewhere in India and with whatever changes were needed to be worked out by the tribals themselves. C. Two approaches were on offer - leaving the tribal people alone and uncontaminated by outside influences, and assimilating them as completely and quickly as possible into the surrounding society - and Nehru rejected both: he called the first the treatment of tribal people as museum specimens to be observed and written about, which was to insult them and was in any case impossible because penetration had gone too far, and he rejected the second because being engulfed by the masses of Indian humanity would destroy the tribals' social and cultural identity and let unscrupulous outsiders take possession of their land and forests. D. Except in the North-East the tribal communities constituted minorities in their own home states, and this single demographic asymmetry explains why the republic needed two different constitutional instruments: self-government where a community was territorially dominant, and protective regulation where it was a dispersed minority among non-tribal neighbours.

Answer: D. Explanation: Except in the North-East the tribal communities constituted minorities in their own home states, and this single demographic asymmetry explains why the republic needed two different constitutional instruments: self-government where a community was territorially dominant, and protective regulation where it was a dispersed minority among non-tribal neighbours. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q9. Which statement correctly identifies Colonial erosion of tribal isolation?

A. Colonialism brought a radical transformation as the tribals' relative isolation was eroded by the penetration of market forces and by integration into British and princely administrations, and money-lenders, traders, revenue farmers, middlemen and petty officials invaded tribal areas until families were engulfed in debt and lost their land to outsiders, many being reduced to agricultural labourers, sharecroppers and rack-rented tenants while belated legislation against land alienation failed to halt the process. B. Verrier Elwin, who lived nearly all his life among the tribal people of central and north-eastern India, was one of the formative influences on the new government's policies and recorded that under British rule tribal people suffered oppression and exploitation as merchants and liquor-vendors cajoled, tricked and swindled them until their broad acres dwindled; his influence underwrote a policy of integration without imposition rather than a policy of rescue or of tutelage. C. To conserve forests and to facilitate their commercial exploitation the colonial authorities brought large tracts under forest laws that forbade shifting cultivation and severely restricted tribal use of the forest and access to its products, and the combination of land loss, indebtedness, exploitation by middlemen and extortion by police and forest officials produced a series of nineteenth- and twentieth-century uprisings including the Santhal uprising and the Munda rebellion led by Birsa Munda, and drew tribal people into the national and peasant movements. D. Two approaches were on offer - leaving the tribal people alone and uncontaminated by outside influences, and assimilating them as completely and quickly as possible into the surrounding society - and Nehru rejected both: he called the first the treatment of tribal people as museum specimens to be observed and written about, which was to insult them and was in any case impossible because penetration had gone too far, and he rejected the second because being engulfed by the masses of Indian humanity would destroy the tribals' social and cultural identity and let unscrupulous outsiders take possession of their land and forests.

Answer: A. Explanation: Colonialism brought a radical transformation as the tribals' relative isolation was eroded by the penetration of market forces and by integration into British and princely administrations, and money-lenders, traders, revenue farmers, middlemen and petty officials invaded tribal areas until families were engulfed in debt and lost their land to outsiders, many being reduced to agricultural labourers, sharecroppers and rack-rented tenants while belated legislation against land alienation failed to halt the process. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q10. Which chronology card should be filed under Colonial erosion of tribal isolation?

A. Verrier Elwin, who lived nearly all his life among the tribal people of central and north-eastern India, was one of the formative influences on the new government's policies and recorded that under British rule tribal people suffered oppression and exploitation as merchants and liquor-vendors cajoled, tricked and swindled them until their broad acres dwindled; his influence underwrote a policy of integration without imposition rather than a policy of rescue or of tutelage. B. Colonialism brought a radical transformation as the tribals' relative isolation was eroded by the penetration of market forces and by integration into British and princely administrations, and money-lenders, traders, revenue farmers, middlemen and petty officials invaded tribal areas until families were engulfed in debt and lost their land to outsiders, many being reduced to agricultural labourers, sharecroppers and rack-rented tenants while belated legislation against land alienation failed to halt the process. C. Two approaches were on offer - leaving the tribal people alone and uncontaminated by outside influences, and assimilating them as completely and quickly as possible into the surrounding society - and Nehru rejected both: he called the first the treatment of tribal people as museum specimens to be observed and written about, which was to insult them and was in any case impossible because penetration had gone too far, and he rejected the second because being engulfed by the masses of Indian humanity would destroy the tribals' social and cultural identity and let unscrupulous outsiders take possession of their land and forests. D. Nehru's alternative was integration: making the tribal people an integral part of the Indian nation while maintaining their distinct identity and culture, on two parameters that had to be held together - the tribal areas have to progress, and they have to progress in their own way - with progress meaning something other than an attempt merely to duplicate what existed elsewhere in India and with whatever changes were needed to be worked out by the tribals themselves.

Answer: B. Explanation: Colonialism brought a radical transformation as the tribals' relative isolation was eroded by the penetration of market forces and by integration into British and princely administrations, and money-lenders, traders, revenue farmers, middlemen and petty officials invaded tribal areas until families were engulfed in debt and lost their land to outsiders, many being reduced to agricultural labourers, sharecroppers and rack-rented tenants while belated legislation against land alienation failed to halt the process. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q11. Which option should a candidate retain when revising Colonial erosion of tribal isolation?

A. Nehru laid down five broad guidelines for government policy: tribal people should develop along the lines of their own genius with no imposition or compulsion from outside and no superiority complex among non-tribals; tribal rights in land and forest should be respected and no outsider should be able to take possession of tribal land; tribal languages should be encouraged and the conditions for their flourishing safeguarded; administration should rely on the tribal people themselves with administrators recruited and trained from among them and as few outsiders as possible; and there should be no over-administration of tribal areas. 'Tribal Panchsheel' is a later label for these guidelines and no exact proclamation year may be attached to it. B. Nehru's alternative was integration: making the tribal people an integral part of the Indian nation while maintaining their distinct identity and culture, on two parameters that had to be held together - the tribal areas have to progress, and they have to progress in their own way - with progress meaning something other than an attempt merely to duplicate what existed elsewhere in India and with whatever changes were needed to be worked out by the tribals themselves. C. Colonialism brought a radical transformation as the tribals' relative isolation was eroded by the penetration of market forces and by integration into British and princely administrations, and money-lenders, traders, revenue farmers, middlemen and petty officials invaded tribal areas until families were engulfed in debt and lost their land to outsiders, many being reduced to agricultural labourers, sharecroppers and rack-rented tenants while belated legislation against land alienation failed to halt the process. D. Two approaches were on offer - leaving the tribal people alone and uncontaminated by outside influences, and assimilating them as completely and quickly as possible into the surrounding society - and Nehru rejected both: he called the first the treatment of tribal people as museum specimens to be observed and written about, which was to insult them and was in any case impossible because penetration had gone too far, and he rejected the second because being engulfed by the masses of Indian humanity would destroy the tribals' social and cultural identity and let unscrupulous outsiders take possession of their land and forests.

Answer: C. Explanation: Colonialism brought a radical transformation as the tribals' relative isolation was eroded by the penetration of market forces and by integration into British and princely administrations, and money-lenders, traders, revenue farmers, middlemen and petty officials invaded tribal areas until families were engulfed in debt and lost their land to outsiders, many being reduced to agricultural labourers, sharecroppers and rack-rented tenants while belated legislation against land alienation failed to halt the process. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q12. Which statement avoids a common matching trap about Colonial erosion of tribal isolation?

A. Nehru's alternative was integration: making the tribal people an integral part of the Indian nation while maintaining their distinct identity and culture, on two parameters that had to be held together - the tribal areas have to progress, and they have to progress in their own way - with progress meaning something other than an attempt merely to duplicate what existed elsewhere in India and with whatever changes were needed to be worked out by the tribals themselves. B. The Constitution gave the policy shape by directing under Article 46 that the state promote with special care the educational and economic interests of the tribal people and protect them from social injustice and all forms of exploitation; governors of states containing tribal areas received a special responsibility including the power to modify central and state laws in their application to those areas and to frame regulations protecting tribal land rights and guarding against money-lenders, full political rights were extended, seats in the legislatures and posts in the services were reserved for the Scheduled Tribes, Tribal Advisory Councils were provided for in all states containing tribal areas, and a Commissioner for Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes was appointed by the President to investigate whether the safeguards were being observed. C. Nehru laid down five broad guidelines for government policy: tribal people should develop along the lines of their own genius with no imposition or compulsion from outside and no superiority complex among non-tribals; tribal rights in land and forest should be respected and no outsider should be able to take possession of tribal land; tribal languages should be encouraged and the conditions for their flourishing safeguarded; administration should rely on the tribal people themselves with administrators recruited and trained from among them and as few outsiders as possible; and there should be no over-administration of tribal areas. 'Tribal Panchsheel' is a later label for these guidelines and no exact proclamation year may be attached to it. D. Colonialism brought a radical transformation as the tribals' relative isolation was eroded by the penetration of market forces and by integration into British and princely administrations, and money-lenders, traders, revenue farmers, middlemen and petty officials invaded tribal areas until families were engulfed in debt and lost their land to outsiders, many being reduced to agricultural labourers, sharecroppers and rack-rented tenants while belated legislation against land alienation failed to halt the process.

Answer: D. Explanation: Colonialism brought a radical transformation as the tribals' relative isolation was eroded by the penetration of market forces and by integration into British and princely administrations, and money-lenders, traders, revenue farmers, middlemen and petty officials invaded tribal areas until families were engulfed in debt and lost their land to outsiders, many being reduced to agricultural labourers, sharecroppers and rack-rented tenants while belated legislation against land alienation failed to halt the process. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q13. Which statement correctly identifies Forest law and the tradition of revolt?

A. To conserve forests and to facilitate their commercial exploitation the colonial authorities brought large tracts under forest laws that forbade shifting cultivation and severely restricted tribal use of the forest and access to its products, and the combination of land loss, indebtedness, exploitation by middlemen and extortion by police and forest officials produced a series of nineteenth- and twentieth-century uprisings including the Santhal uprising and the Munda rebellion led by Birsa Munda, and drew tribal people into the national and peasant movements. B. Nehru's alternative was integration: making the tribal people an integral part of the Indian nation while maintaining their distinct identity and culture, on two parameters that had to be held together - the tribal areas have to progress, and they have to progress in their own way - with progress meaning something other than an attempt merely to duplicate what existed elsewhere in India and with whatever changes were needed to be worked out by the tribals themselves. C. Two approaches were on offer - leaving the tribal people alone and uncontaminated by outside influences, and assimilating them as completely and quickly as possible into the surrounding society - and Nehru rejected both: he called the first the treatment of tribal people as museum specimens to be observed and written about, which was to insult them and was in any case impossible because penetration had gone too far, and he rejected the second because being engulfed by the masses of Indian humanity would destroy the tribals' social and cultural identity and let unscrupulous outsiders take possession of their land and forests. D. Verrier Elwin, who lived nearly all his life among the tribal people of central and north-eastern India, was one of the formative influences on the new government's policies and recorded that under British rule tribal people suffered oppression and exploitation as merchants and liquor-vendors cajoled, tricked and swindled them until their broad acres dwindled; his influence underwrote a policy of integration without imposition rather than a policy of rescue or of tutelage.

Answer: A. Explanation: To conserve forests and to facilitate their commercial exploitation the colonial authorities brought large tracts under forest laws that forbade shifting cultivation and severely restricted tribal use of the forest and access to its products, and the combination of land loss, indebtedness, exploitation by middlemen and extortion by police and forest officials produced a series of nineteenth- and twentieth-century uprisings including the Santhal uprising and the Munda rebellion led by Birsa Munda, and drew tribal people into the national and peasant movements. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q14. Which chronology card should be filed under Forest law and the tradition of revolt?

A. Nehru laid down five broad guidelines for government policy: tribal people should develop along the lines of their own genius with no imposition or compulsion from outside and no superiority complex among non-tribals; tribal rights in land and forest should be respected and no outsider should be able to take possession of tribal land; tribal languages should be encouraged and the conditions for their flourishing safeguarded; administration should rely on the tribal people themselves with administrators recruited and trained from among them and as few outsiders as possible; and there should be no over-administration of tribal areas. 'Tribal Panchsheel' is a later label for these guidelines and no exact proclamation year may be attached to it. B. To conserve forests and to facilitate their commercial exploitation the colonial authorities brought large tracts under forest laws that forbade shifting cultivation and severely restricted tribal use of the forest and access to its products, and the combination of land loss, indebtedness, exploitation by middlemen and extortion by police and forest officials produced a series of nineteenth- and twentieth-century uprisings including the Santhal uprising and the Munda rebellion led by Birsa Munda, and drew tribal people into the national and peasant movements. C. Two approaches were on offer - leaving the tribal people alone and uncontaminated by outside influences, and assimilating them as completely and quickly as possible into the surrounding society - and Nehru rejected both: he called the first the treatment of tribal people as museum specimens to be observed and written about, which was to insult them and was in any case impossible because penetration had gone too far, and he rejected the second because being engulfed by the masses of Indian humanity would destroy the tribals' social and cultural identity and let unscrupulous outsiders take possession of their land and forests. D. Nehru's alternative was integration: making the tribal people an integral part of the Indian nation while maintaining their distinct identity and culture, on two parameters that had to be held together - the tribal areas have to progress, and they have to progress in their own way - with progress meaning something other than an attempt merely to duplicate what existed elsewhere in India and with whatever changes were needed to be worked out by the tribals themselves.

Answer: B. Explanation: To conserve forests and to facilitate their commercial exploitation the colonial authorities brought large tracts under forest laws that forbade shifting cultivation and severely restricted tribal use of the forest and access to its products, and the combination of land loss, indebtedness, exploitation by middlemen and extortion by police and forest officials produced a series of nineteenth- and twentieth-century uprisings including the Santhal uprising and the Munda rebellion led by Birsa Munda, and drew tribal people into the national and peasant movements. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q15. Which option should a candidate retain when revising Forest law and the tradition of revolt?

A. The Constitution gave the policy shape by directing under Article 46 that the state promote with special care the educational and economic interests of the tribal people and protect them from social injustice and all forms of exploitation; governors of states containing tribal areas received a special responsibility including the power to modify central and state laws in their application to those areas and to frame regulations protecting tribal land rights and guarding against money-lenders, full political rights were extended, seats in the legislatures and posts in the services were reserved for the Scheduled Tribes, Tribal Advisory Councils were provided for in all states containing tribal areas, and a Commissioner for Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes was appointed by the President to investigate whether the safeguards were being observed. B. Nehru laid down five broad guidelines for government policy: tribal people should develop along the lines of their own genius with no imposition or compulsion from outside and no superiority complex among non-tribals; tribal rights in land and forest should be respected and no outsider should be able to take possession of tribal land; tribal languages should be encouraged and the conditions for their flourishing safeguarded; administration should rely on the tribal people themselves with administrators recruited and trained from among them and as few outsiders as possible; and there should be no over-administration of tribal areas. 'Tribal Panchsheel' is a later label for these guidelines and no exact proclamation year may be attached to it. C. To conserve forests and to facilitate their commercial exploitation the colonial authorities brought large tracts under forest laws that forbade shifting cultivation and severely restricted tribal use of the forest and access to its products, and the combination of land loss, indebtedness, exploitation by middlemen and extortion by police and forest officials produced a series of nineteenth- and twentieth-century uprisings including the Santhal uprising and the Munda rebellion led by Birsa Munda, and drew tribal people into the national and peasant movements. D. Nehru's alternative was integration: making the tribal people an integral part of the Indian nation while maintaining their distinct identity and culture, on two parameters that had to be held together - the tribal areas have to progress, and they have to progress in their own way - with progress meaning something other than an attempt merely to duplicate what existed elsewhere in India and with whatever changes were needed to be worked out by the tribals themselves.

Answer: C. Explanation: To conserve forests and to facilitate their commercial exploitation the colonial authorities brought large tracts under forest laws that forbade shifting cultivation and severely restricted tribal use of the forest and access to its products, and the combination of land loss, indebtedness, exploitation by middlemen and extortion by police and forest officials produced a series of nineteenth- and twentieth-century uprisings including the Santhal uprising and the Munda rebellion led by Birsa Munda, and drew tribal people into the national and peasant movements. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q16. Which statement avoids a common matching trap about Forest law and the tradition of revolt?

A. The Sixth Schedule applied to the tribal areas of Assam and offered a fair degree of self-government through autonomous districts and district and regional councils exercising some legislative and judicial functions within the jurisdiction of the legislature and Parliament, while the Fifth Schedule together with Tribal Advisory Councils, Article 46 and reservations covered the other Scheduled Areas where tribal communities were dispersed minorities; the two Schedules answer two different demographic problems, they are never interchangeable, and their detailed provisions belong to the Polity owner rather than to this historical one. B. Nehru laid down five broad guidelines for government policy: tribal people should develop along the lines of their own genius with no imposition or compulsion from outside and no superiority complex among non-tribals; tribal rights in land and forest should be respected and no outsider should be able to take possession of tribal land; tribal languages should be encouraged and the conditions for their flourishing safeguarded; administration should rely on the tribal people themselves with administrators recruited and trained from among them and as few outsiders as possible; and there should be no over-administration of tribal areas. 'Tribal Panchsheel' is a later label for these guidelines and no exact proclamation year may be attached to it. C. The Constitution gave the policy shape by directing under Article 46 that the state promote with special care the educational and economic interests of the tribal people and protect them from social injustice and all forms of exploitation; governors of states containing tribal areas received a special responsibility including the power to modify central and state laws in their application to those areas and to frame regulations protecting tribal land rights and guarding against money-lenders, full political rights were extended, seats in the legislatures and posts in the services were reserved for the Scheduled Tribes, Tribal Advisory Councils were provided for in all states containing tribal areas, and a Commissioner for Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes was appointed by the President to investigate whether the safeguards were being observed. D. To conserve forests and to facilitate their commercial exploitation the colonial authorities brought large tracts under forest laws that forbade shifting cultivation and severely restricted tribal use of the forest and access to its products, and the combination of land loss, indebtedness, exploitation by middlemen and extortion by police and forest officials produced a series of nineteenth- and twentieth-century uprisings including the Santhal uprising and the Munda rebellion led by Birsa Munda, and drew tribal people into the national and peasant movements.

Answer: D. Explanation: To conserve forests and to facilitate their commercial exploitation the colonial authorities brought large tracts under forest laws that forbade shifting cultivation and severely restricted tribal use of the forest and access to its products, and the combination of land loss, indebtedness, exploitation by middlemen and extortion by police and forest officials produced a series of nineteenth- and twentieth-century uprisings including the Santhal uprising and the Munda rebellion led by Birsa Munda, and drew tribal people into the national and peasant movements. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q17. Which statement correctly identifies Verrier Elwin and integration without imposition?

A. Verrier Elwin, who lived nearly all his life among the tribal people of central and north-eastern India, was one of the formative influences on the new government's policies and recorded that under British rule tribal people suffered oppression and exploitation as merchants and liquor-vendors cajoled, tricked and swindled them until their broad acres dwindled; his influence underwrote a policy of integration without imposition rather than a policy of rescue or of tutelage. B. Nehru laid down five broad guidelines for government policy: tribal people should develop along the lines of their own genius with no imposition or compulsion from outside and no superiority complex among non-tribals; tribal rights in land and forest should be respected and no outsider should be able to take possession of tribal land; tribal languages should be encouraged and the conditions for their flourishing safeguarded; administration should rely on the tribal people themselves with administrators recruited and trained from among them and as few outsiders as possible; and there should be no over-administration of tribal areas. 'Tribal Panchsheel' is a later label for these guidelines and no exact proclamation year may be attached to it. C. Nehru's alternative was integration: making the tribal people an integral part of the Indian nation while maintaining their distinct identity and culture, on two parameters that had to be held together - the tribal areas have to progress, and they have to progress in their own way - with progress meaning something other than an attempt merely to duplicate what existed elsewhere in India and with whatever changes were needed to be worked out by the tribals themselves. D. Two approaches were on offer - leaving the tribal people alone and uncontaminated by outside influences, and assimilating them as completely and quickly as possible into the surrounding society - and Nehru rejected both: he called the first the treatment of tribal people as museum specimens to be observed and written about, which was to insult them and was in any case impossible because penetration had gone too far, and he rejected the second because being engulfed by the masses of Indian humanity would destroy the tribals' social and cultural identity and let unscrupulous outsiders take possession of their land and forests.

Answer: A. Explanation: Verrier Elwin, who lived nearly all his life among the tribal people of central and north-eastern India, was one of the formative influences on the new government's policies and recorded that under British rule tribal people suffered oppression and exploitation as merchants and liquor-vendors cajoled, tricked and swindled them until their broad acres dwindled; his influence underwrote a policy of integration without imposition rather than a policy of rescue or of tutelage. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q18. Which chronology card should be filed under Verrier Elwin and integration without imposition?

A. Nehru's alternative was integration: making the tribal people an integral part of the Indian nation while maintaining their distinct identity and culture, on two parameters that had to be held together - the tribal areas have to progress, and they have to progress in their own way - with progress meaning something other than an attempt merely to duplicate what existed elsewhere in India and with whatever changes were needed to be worked out by the tribals themselves. B. Verrier Elwin, who lived nearly all his life among the tribal people of central and north-eastern India, was one of the formative influences on the new government's policies and recorded that under British rule tribal people suffered oppression and exploitation as merchants and liquor-vendors cajoled, tricked and swindled them until their broad acres dwindled; his influence underwrote a policy of integration without imposition rather than a policy of rescue or of tutelage. C. The Constitution gave the policy shape by directing under Article 46 that the state promote with special care the educational and economic interests of the tribal people and protect them from social injustice and all forms of exploitation; governors of states containing tribal areas received a special responsibility including the power to modify central and state laws in their application to those areas and to frame regulations protecting tribal land rights and guarding against money-lenders, full political rights were extended, seats in the legislatures and posts in the services were reserved for the Scheduled Tribes, Tribal Advisory Councils were provided for in all states containing tribal areas, and a Commissioner for Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes was appointed by the President to investigate whether the safeguards were being observed. D. Nehru laid down five broad guidelines for government policy: tribal people should develop along the lines of their own genius with no imposition or compulsion from outside and no superiority complex among non-tribals; tribal rights in land and forest should be respected and no outsider should be able to take possession of tribal land; tribal languages should be encouraged and the conditions for their flourishing safeguarded; administration should rely on the tribal people themselves with administrators recruited and trained from among them and as few outsiders as possible; and there should be no over-administration of tribal areas. 'Tribal Panchsheel' is a later label for these guidelines and no exact proclamation year may be attached to it.

Answer: B. Explanation: Verrier Elwin, who lived nearly all his life among the tribal people of central and north-eastern India, was one of the formative influences on the new government's policies and recorded that under British rule tribal people suffered oppression and exploitation as merchants and liquor-vendors cajoled, tricked and swindled them until their broad acres dwindled; his influence underwrote a policy of integration without imposition rather than a policy of rescue or of tutelage. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q19. Which option should a candidate retain when revising Verrier Elwin and integration without imposition?

A. Nehru laid down five broad guidelines for government policy: tribal people should develop along the lines of their own genius with no imposition or compulsion from outside and no superiority complex among non-tribals; tribal rights in land and forest should be respected and no outsider should be able to take possession of tribal land; tribal languages should be encouraged and the conditions for their flourishing safeguarded; administration should rely on the tribal people themselves with administrators recruited and trained from among them and as few outsiders as possible; and there should be no over-administration of tribal areas. 'Tribal Panchsheel' is a later label for these guidelines and no exact proclamation year may be attached to it. B. The Constitution gave the policy shape by directing under Article 46 that the state promote with special care the educational and economic interests of the tribal people and protect them from social injustice and all forms of exploitation; governors of states containing tribal areas received a special responsibility including the power to modify central and state laws in their application to those areas and to frame regulations protecting tribal land rights and guarding against money-lenders, full political rights were extended, seats in the legislatures and posts in the services were reserved for the Scheduled Tribes, Tribal Advisory Councils were provided for in all states containing tribal areas, and a Commissioner for Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes was appointed by the President to investigate whether the safeguards were being observed. C. Verrier Elwin, who lived nearly all his life among the tribal people of central and north-eastern India, was one of the formative influences on the new government's policies and recorded that under British rule tribal people suffered oppression and exploitation as merchants and liquor-vendors cajoled, tricked and swindled them until their broad acres dwindled; his influence underwrote a policy of integration without imposition rather than a policy of rescue or of tutelage. D. The Sixth Schedule applied to the tribal areas of Assam and offered a fair degree of self-government through autonomous districts and district and regional councils exercising some legislative and judicial functions within the jurisdiction of the legislature and Parliament, while the Fifth Schedule together with Tribal Advisory Councils, Article 46 and reservations covered the other Scheduled Areas where tribal communities were dispersed minorities; the two Schedules answer two different demographic problems, they are never interchangeable, and their detailed provisions belong to the Polity owner rather than to this historical one.

Answer: C. Explanation: Verrier Elwin, who lived nearly all his life among the tribal people of central and north-eastern India, was one of the formative influences on the new government's policies and recorded that under British rule tribal people suffered oppression and exploitation as merchants and liquor-vendors cajoled, tricked and swindled them until their broad acres dwindled; his influence underwrote a policy of integration without imposition rather than a policy of rescue or of tutelage. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q20. Which statement avoids a common matching trap about Verrier Elwin and integration without imposition?

A. In spite of the constitutional safeguards the tribals' progress and welfare was slow and even dismal outside the North-East, because well-intentioned measures were weakly executed, central and state policies diverged, Tribal Advisory Councils did not function effectively, funds allocated for tribal welfare went unspent or were misapplied, laws against transfer of land to outsiders were evaded, the rapid extension of mines and industries displaced communities, deforestation and curtailed forest access destroyed livelihoods, and an emerging tribal elite captured much of what development did occur; the honest verdict is therefore split between political accommodation that succeeded and development that did not. B. The Sixth Schedule applied to the tribal areas of Assam and offered a fair degree of self-government through autonomous districts and district and regional councils exercising some legislative and judicial functions within the jurisdiction of the legislature and Parliament, while the Fifth Schedule together with Tribal Advisory Councils, Article 46 and reservations covered the other Scheduled Areas where tribal communities were dispersed minorities; the two Schedules answer two different demographic problems, they are never interchangeable, and their detailed provisions belong to the Polity owner rather than to this historical one. C. The Constitution gave the policy shape by directing under Article 46 that the state promote with special care the educational and economic interests of the tribal people and protect them from social injustice and all forms of exploitation; governors of states containing tribal areas received a special responsibility including the power to modify central and state laws in their application to those areas and to frame regulations protecting tribal land rights and guarding against money-lenders, full political rights were extended, seats in the legislatures and posts in the services were reserved for the Scheduled Tribes, Tribal Advisory Councils were provided for in all states containing tribal areas, and a Commissioner for Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes was appointed by the President to investigate whether the safeguards were being observed. D. Verrier Elwin, who lived nearly all his life among the tribal people of central and north-eastern India, was one of the formative influences on the new government's policies and recorded that under British rule tribal people suffered oppression and exploitation as merchants and liquor-vendors cajoled, tricked and swindled them until their broad acres dwindled; his influence underwrote a policy of integration without imposition rather than a policy of rescue or of tutelage.

Answer: D. Explanation: Verrier Elwin, who lived nearly all his life among the tribal people of central and north-eastern India, was one of the formative influences on the new government's policies and recorded that under British rule tribal people suffered oppression and exploitation as merchants and liquor-vendors cajoled, tricked and swindled them until their broad acres dwindled; his influence underwrote a policy of integration without imposition rather than a policy of rescue or of tutelage. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q21. Which statement correctly identifies The two approaches Nehru rejected?

A. Two approaches were on offer - leaving the tribal people alone and uncontaminated by outside influences, and assimilating them as completely and quickly as possible into the surrounding society - and Nehru rejected both: he called the first the treatment of tribal people as museum specimens to be observed and written about, which was to insult them and was in any case impossible because penetration had gone too far, and he rejected the second because being engulfed by the masses of Indian humanity would destroy the tribals' social and cultural identity and let unscrupulous outsiders take possession of their land and forests. B. Nehru's alternative was integration: making the tribal people an integral part of the Indian nation while maintaining their distinct identity and culture, on two parameters that had to be held together - the tribal areas have to progress, and they have to progress in their own way - with progress meaning something other than an attempt merely to duplicate what existed elsewhere in India and with whatever changes were needed to be worked out by the tribals themselves. C. The Constitution gave the policy shape by directing under Article 46 that the state promote with special care the educational and economic interests of the tribal people and protect them from social injustice and all forms of exploitation; governors of states containing tribal areas received a special responsibility including the power to modify central and state laws in their application to those areas and to frame regulations protecting tribal land rights and guarding against money-lenders, full political rights were extended, seats in the legislatures and posts in the services were reserved for the Scheduled Tribes, Tribal Advisory Councils were provided for in all states containing tribal areas, and a Commissioner for Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes was appointed by the President to investigate whether the safeguards were being observed. D. Nehru laid down five broad guidelines for government policy: tribal people should develop along the lines of their own genius with no imposition or compulsion from outside and no superiority complex among non-tribals; tribal rights in land and forest should be respected and no outsider should be able to take possession of tribal land; tribal languages should be encouraged and the conditions for their flourishing safeguarded; administration should rely on the tribal people themselves with administrators recruited and trained from among them and as few outsiders as possible; and there should be no over-administration of tribal areas. 'Tribal Panchsheel' is a later label for these guidelines and no exact proclamation year may be attached to it.

Answer: A. Explanation: Two approaches were on offer - leaving the tribal people alone and uncontaminated by outside influences, and assimilating them as completely and quickly as possible into the surrounding society - and Nehru rejected both: he called the first the treatment of tribal people as museum specimens to be observed and written about, which was to insult them and was in any case impossible because penetration had gone too far, and he rejected the second because being engulfed by the masses of Indian humanity would destroy the tribals' social and cultural identity and let unscrupulous outsiders take possession of their land and forests. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q22. Which chronology card should be filed under The two approaches Nehru rejected?

A. The Constitution gave the policy shape by directing under Article 46 that the state promote with special care the educational and economic interests of the tribal people and protect them from social injustice and all forms of exploitation; governors of states containing tribal areas received a special responsibility including the power to modify central and state laws in their application to those areas and to frame regulations protecting tribal land rights and guarding against money-lenders, full political rights were extended, seats in the legislatures and posts in the services were reserved for the Scheduled Tribes, Tribal Advisory Councils were provided for in all states containing tribal areas, and a Commissioner for Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes was appointed by the President to investigate whether the safeguards were being observed. B. Two approaches were on offer - leaving the tribal people alone and uncontaminated by outside influences, and assimilating them as completely and quickly as possible into the surrounding society - and Nehru rejected both: he called the first the treatment of tribal people as museum specimens to be observed and written about, which was to insult them and was in any case impossible because penetration had gone too far, and he rejected the second because being engulfed by the masses of Indian humanity would destroy the tribals' social and cultural identity and let unscrupulous outsiders take possession of their land and forests. C. The Sixth Schedule applied to the tribal areas of Assam and offered a fair degree of self-government through autonomous districts and district and regional councils exercising some legislative and judicial functions within the jurisdiction of the legislature and Parliament, while the Fifth Schedule together with Tribal Advisory Councils, Article 46 and reservations covered the other Scheduled Areas where tribal communities were dispersed minorities; the two Schedules answer two different demographic problems, they are never interchangeable, and their detailed provisions belong to the Polity owner rather than to this historical one. D. Nehru laid down five broad guidelines for government policy: tribal people should develop along the lines of their own genius with no imposition or compulsion from outside and no superiority complex among non-tribals; tribal rights in land and forest should be respected and no outsider should be able to take possession of tribal land; tribal languages should be encouraged and the conditions for their flourishing safeguarded; administration should rely on the tribal people themselves with administrators recruited and trained from among them and as few outsiders as possible; and there should be no over-administration of tribal areas. 'Tribal Panchsheel' is a later label for these guidelines and no exact proclamation year may be attached to it.

Answer: B. Explanation: Two approaches were on offer - leaving the tribal people alone and uncontaminated by outside influences, and assimilating them as completely and quickly as possible into the surrounding society - and Nehru rejected both: he called the first the treatment of tribal people as museum specimens to be observed and written about, which was to insult them and was in any case impossible because penetration had gone too far, and he rejected the second because being engulfed by the masses of Indian humanity would destroy the tribals' social and cultural identity and let unscrupulous outsiders take possession of their land and forests. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q23. Which option should a candidate retain when revising The two approaches Nehru rejected?

A. The Sixth Schedule applied to the tribal areas of Assam and offered a fair degree of self-government through autonomous districts and district and regional councils exercising some legislative and judicial functions within the jurisdiction of the legislature and Parliament, while the Fifth Schedule together with Tribal Advisory Councils, Article 46 and reservations covered the other Scheduled Areas where tribal communities were dispersed minorities; the two Schedules answer two different demographic problems, they are never interchangeable, and their detailed provisions belong to the Polity owner rather than to this historical one. B. The Constitution gave the policy shape by directing under Article 46 that the state promote with special care the educational and economic interests of the tribal people and protect them from social injustice and all forms of exploitation; governors of states containing tribal areas received a special responsibility including the power to modify central and state laws in their application to those areas and to frame regulations protecting tribal land rights and guarding against money-lenders, full political rights were extended, seats in the legislatures and posts in the services were reserved for the Scheduled Tribes, Tribal Advisory Councils were provided for in all states containing tribal areas, and a Commissioner for Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes was appointed by the President to investigate whether the safeguards were being observed. C. Two approaches were on offer - leaving the tribal people alone and uncontaminated by outside influences, and assimilating them as completely and quickly as possible into the surrounding society - and Nehru rejected both: he called the first the treatment of tribal people as museum specimens to be observed and written about, which was to insult them and was in any case impossible because penetration had gone too far, and he rejected the second because being engulfed by the masses of Indian humanity would destroy the tribals' social and cultural identity and let unscrupulous outsiders take possession of their land and forests. D. In spite of the constitutional safeguards the tribals' progress and welfare was slow and even dismal outside the North-East, because well-intentioned measures were weakly executed, central and state policies diverged, Tribal Advisory Councils did not function effectively, funds allocated for tribal welfare went unspent or were misapplied, laws against transfer of land to outsiders were evaded, the rapid extension of mines and industries displaced communities, deforestation and curtailed forest access destroyed livelihoods, and an emerging tribal elite captured much of what development did occur; the honest verdict is therefore split between political accommodation that succeeded and development that did not.

Answer: C. Explanation: Two approaches were on offer - leaving the tribal people alone and uncontaminated by outside influences, and assimilating them as completely and quickly as possible into the surrounding society - and Nehru rejected both: he called the first the treatment of tribal people as museum specimens to be observed and written about, which was to insult them and was in any case impossible because penetration had gone too far, and he rejected the second because being engulfed by the masses of Indian humanity would destroy the tribals' social and cultural identity and let unscrupulous outsiders take possession of their land and forests. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q24. Which statement avoids a common matching trap about The two approaches Nehru rejected?

A. In spite of the constitutional safeguards the tribals' progress and welfare was slow and even dismal outside the North-East, because well-intentioned measures were weakly executed, central and state policies diverged, Tribal Advisory Councils did not function effectively, funds allocated for tribal welfare went unspent or were misapplied, laws against transfer of land to outsiders were evaded, the rapid extension of mines and industries displaced communities, deforestation and curtailed forest access destroyed livelihoods, and an emerging tribal elite captured much of what development did occur; the honest verdict is therefore split between political accommodation that succeeded and development that did not. B. The tribes of north-eastern India, consisting of over a hundred groups speaking a wide variety of languages, differed from tribal communities elsewhere because they formed the overwhelming majority in the areas they inhabited, because British administration had given their areas a separate status inside Assam and excluded plains outsiders from acquiring land, and because they had almost no political or cultural contact with the national movement, so that the common bonds forged in the anti-imperialist struggle had little purchase there and some missionaries and other foreigners even promoted sentiment for separate states immediately after independence. C. The Sixth Schedule applied to the tribal areas of Assam and offered a fair degree of self-government through autonomous districts and district and regional councils exercising some legislative and judicial functions within the jurisdiction of the legislature and Parliament, while the Fifth Schedule together with Tribal Advisory Councils, Article 46 and reservations covered the other Scheduled Areas where tribal communities were dispersed minorities; the two Schedules answer two different demographic problems, they are never interchangeable, and their detailed provisions belong to the Polity owner rather than to this historical one. D. Two approaches were on offer - leaving the tribal people alone and uncontaminated by outside influences, and assimilating them as completely and quickly as possible into the surrounding society - and Nehru rejected both: he called the first the treatment of tribal people as museum specimens to be observed and written about, which was to insult them and was in any case impossible because penetration had gone too far, and he rejected the second because being engulfed by the masses of Indian humanity would destroy the tribals' social and cultural identity and let unscrupulous outsiders take possession of their land and forests.

Answer: D. Explanation: Two approaches were on offer - leaving the tribal people alone and uncontaminated by outside influences, and assimilating them as completely and quickly as possible into the surrounding society - and Nehru rejected both: he called the first the treatment of tribal people as museum specimens to be observed and written about, which was to insult them and was in any case impossible because penetration had gone too far, and he rejected the second because being engulfed by the masses of Indian humanity would destroy the tribals' social and cultural identity and let unscrupulous outsiders take possession of their land and forests. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q25. Which statement correctly identifies Integration with identity and the two parameters?

A. Nehru's alternative was integration: making the tribal people an integral part of the Indian nation while maintaining their distinct identity and culture, on two parameters that had to be held together - the tribal areas have to progress, and they have to progress in their own way - with progress meaning something other than an attempt merely to duplicate what existed elsewhere in India and with whatever changes were needed to be worked out by the tribals themselves. B. The Constitution gave the policy shape by directing under Article 46 that the state promote with special care the educational and economic interests of the tribal people and protect them from social injustice and all forms of exploitation; governors of states containing tribal areas received a special responsibility including the power to modify central and state laws in their application to those areas and to frame regulations protecting tribal land rights and guarding against money-lenders, full political rights were extended, seats in the legislatures and posts in the services were reserved for the Scheduled Tribes, Tribal Advisory Councils were provided for in all states containing tribal areas, and a Commissioner for Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes was appointed by the President to investigate whether the safeguards were being observed. C. Nehru laid down five broad guidelines for government policy: tribal people should develop along the lines of their own genius with no imposition or compulsion from outside and no superiority complex among non-tribals; tribal rights in land and forest should be respected and no outsider should be able to take possession of tribal land; tribal languages should be encouraged and the conditions for their flourishing safeguarded; administration should rely on the tribal people themselves with administrators recruited and trained from among them and as few outsiders as possible; and there should be no over-administration of tribal areas. 'Tribal Panchsheel' is a later label for these guidelines and no exact proclamation year may be attached to it. D. The Sixth Schedule applied to the tribal areas of Assam and offered a fair degree of self-government through autonomous districts and district and regional councils exercising some legislative and judicial functions within the jurisdiction of the legislature and Parliament, while the Fifth Schedule together with Tribal Advisory Councils, Article 46 and reservations covered the other Scheduled Areas where tribal communities were dispersed minorities; the two Schedules answer two different demographic problems, they are never interchangeable, and their detailed provisions belong to the Polity owner rather than to this historical one.

Answer: A. Explanation: Nehru's alternative was integration: making the tribal people an integral part of the Indian nation while maintaining their distinct identity and culture, on two parameters that had to be held together - the tribal areas have to progress, and they have to progress in their own way - with progress meaning something other than an attempt merely to duplicate what existed elsewhere in India and with whatever changes were needed to be worked out by the tribals themselves. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q26. Which chronology card should be filed under Integration with identity and the two parameters?

A. The Sixth Schedule applied to the tribal areas of Assam and offered a fair degree of self-government through autonomous districts and district and regional councils exercising some legislative and judicial functions within the jurisdiction of the legislature and Parliament, while the Fifth Schedule together with Tribal Advisory Councils, Article 46 and reservations covered the other Scheduled Areas where tribal communities were dispersed minorities; the two Schedules answer two different demographic problems, they are never interchangeable, and their detailed provisions belong to the Polity owner rather than to this historical one. B. Nehru's alternative was integration: making the tribal people an integral part of the Indian nation while maintaining their distinct identity and culture, on two parameters that had to be held together - the tribal areas have to progress, and they have to progress in their own way - with progress meaning something other than an attempt merely to duplicate what existed elsewhere in India and with whatever changes were needed to be worked out by the tribals themselves. C. In spite of the constitutional safeguards the tribals' progress and welfare was slow and even dismal outside the North-East, because well-intentioned measures were weakly executed, central and state policies diverged, Tribal Advisory Councils did not function effectively, funds allocated for tribal welfare went unspent or were misapplied, laws against transfer of land to outsiders were evaded, the rapid extension of mines and industries displaced communities, deforestation and curtailed forest access destroyed livelihoods, and an emerging tribal elite captured much of what development did occur; the honest verdict is therefore split between political accommodation that succeeded and development that did not. D. The Constitution gave the policy shape by directing under Article 46 that the state promote with special care the educational and economic interests of the tribal people and protect them from social injustice and all forms of exploitation; governors of states containing tribal areas received a special responsibility including the power to modify central and state laws in their application to those areas and to frame regulations protecting tribal land rights and guarding against money-lenders, full political rights were extended, seats in the legislatures and posts in the services were reserved for the Scheduled Tribes, Tribal Advisory Councils were provided for in all states containing tribal areas, and a Commissioner for Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes was appointed by the President to investigate whether the safeguards were being observed.

Answer: B. Explanation: Nehru's alternative was integration: making the tribal people an integral part of the Indian nation while maintaining their distinct identity and culture, on two parameters that had to be held together - the tribal areas have to progress, and they have to progress in their own way - with progress meaning something other than an attempt merely to duplicate what existed elsewhere in India and with whatever changes were needed to be worked out by the tribals themselves. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q27. Which option should a candidate retain when revising Integration with identity and the two parameters?

A. In spite of the constitutional safeguards the tribals' progress and welfare was slow and even dismal outside the North-East, because well-intentioned measures were weakly executed, central and state policies diverged, Tribal Advisory Councils did not function effectively, funds allocated for tribal welfare went unspent or were misapplied, laws against transfer of land to outsiders were evaded, the rapid extension of mines and industries displaced communities, deforestation and curtailed forest access destroyed livelihoods, and an emerging tribal elite captured much of what development did occur; the honest verdict is therefore split between political accommodation that succeeded and development that did not. B. The Sixth Schedule applied to the tribal areas of Assam and offered a fair degree of self-government through autonomous districts and district and regional councils exercising some legislative and judicial functions within the jurisdiction of the legislature and Parliament, while the Fifth Schedule together with Tribal Advisory Councils, Article 46 and reservations covered the other Scheduled Areas where tribal communities were dispersed minorities; the two Schedules answer two different demographic problems, they are never interchangeable, and their detailed provisions belong to the Polity owner rather than to this historical one. C. Nehru's alternative was integration: making the tribal people an integral part of the Indian nation while maintaining their distinct identity and culture, on two parameters that had to be held together - the tribal areas have to progress, and they have to progress in their own way - with progress meaning something other than an attempt merely to duplicate what existed elsewhere in India and with whatever changes were needed to be worked out by the tribals themselves. D. The tribes of north-eastern India, consisting of over a hundred groups speaking a wide variety of languages, differed from tribal communities elsewhere because they formed the overwhelming majority in the areas they inhabited, because British administration had given their areas a separate status inside Assam and excluded plains outsiders from acquiring land, and because they had almost no political or cultural contact with the national movement, so that the common bonds forged in the anti-imperialist struggle had little purchase there and some missionaries and other foreigners even promoted sentiment for separate states immediately after independence.

Answer: C. Explanation: Nehru's alternative was integration: making the tribal people an integral part of the Indian nation while maintaining their distinct identity and culture, on two parameters that had to be held together - the tribal areas have to progress, and they have to progress in their own way - with progress meaning something other than an attempt merely to duplicate what existed elsewhere in India and with whatever changes were needed to be worked out by the tribals themselves. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q28. Which statement avoids a common matching trap about Integration with identity and the two parameters?

A. In spite of the constitutional safeguards the tribals' progress and welfare was slow and even dismal outside the North-East, because well-intentioned measures were weakly executed, central and state policies diverged, Tribal Advisory Councils did not function effectively, funds allocated for tribal welfare went unspent or were misapplied, laws against transfer of land to outsiders were evaded, the rapid extension of mines and industries displaced communities, deforestation and curtailed forest access destroyed livelihoods, and an emerging tribal elite captured much of what development did occur; the honest verdict is therefore split between political accommodation that succeeded and development that did not. B. The North-East Frontier Agency was created in 1948 out of the border areas of Assam as a Union Territory outside the jurisdiction of Assam and placed under a special administration manned by a specially recruited cadre asked to implement development without disturbing the social and cultural pattern of life, and it was there that the Nehru-Elwin policy was implemented best; the objective of the Sixth Schedule was likewise to enable tribal people to live according to their own ways, with the Government of India willing to amend the provisions further to promote autonomy while refusing to countenance secession or violence. C. The tribes of north-eastern India, consisting of over a hundred groups speaking a wide variety of languages, differed from tribal communities elsewhere because they formed the overwhelming majority in the areas they inhabited, because British administration had given their areas a separate status inside Assam and excluded plains outsiders from acquiring land, and because they had almost no political or cultural contact with the national movement, so that the common bonds forged in the anti-imperialist struggle had little purchase there and some missionaries and other foreigners even promoted sentiment for separate states immediately after independence. D. Nehru's alternative was integration: making the tribal people an integral part of the Indian nation while maintaining their distinct identity and culture, on two parameters that had to be held together - the tribal areas have to progress, and they have to progress in their own way - with progress meaning something other than an attempt merely to duplicate what existed elsewhere in India and with whatever changes were needed to be worked out by the tribals themselves.

Answer: D. Explanation: Nehru's alternative was integration: making the tribal people an integral part of the Indian nation while maintaining their distinct identity and culture, on two parameters that had to be held together - the tribal areas have to progress, and they have to progress in their own way - with progress meaning something other than an attempt merely to duplicate what existed elsewhere in India and with whatever changes were needed to be worked out by the tribals themselves. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q29. Which statement correctly identifies The five guidelines later labelled the Tribal Panchsheel?

A. Nehru laid down five broad guidelines for government policy: tribal people should develop along the lines of their own genius with no imposition or compulsion from outside and no superiority complex among non-tribals; tribal rights in land and forest should be respected and no outsider should be able to take possession of tribal land; tribal languages should be encouraged and the conditions for their flourishing safeguarded; administration should rely on the tribal people themselves with administrators recruited and trained from among them and as few outsiders as possible; and there should be no over-administration of tribal areas. 'Tribal Panchsheel' is a later label for these guidelines and no exact proclamation year may be attached to it. B. The Constitution gave the policy shape by directing under Article 46 that the state promote with special care the educational and economic interests of the tribal people and protect them from social injustice and all forms of exploitation; governors of states containing tribal areas received a special responsibility including the power to modify central and state laws in their application to those areas and to frame regulations protecting tribal land rights and guarding against money-lenders, full political rights were extended, seats in the legislatures and posts in the services were reserved for the Scheduled Tribes, Tribal Advisory Councils were provided for in all states containing tribal areas, and a Commissioner for Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes was appointed by the President to investigate whether the safeguards were being observed. C. In spite of the constitutional safeguards the tribals' progress and welfare was slow and even dismal outside the North-East, because well-intentioned measures were weakly executed, central and state policies diverged, Tribal Advisory Councils did not function effectively, funds allocated for tribal welfare went unspent or were misapplied, laws against transfer of land to outsiders were evaded, the rapid extension of mines and industries displaced communities, deforestation and curtailed forest access destroyed livelihoods, and an emerging tribal elite captured much of what development did occur; the honest verdict is therefore split between political accommodation that succeeded and development that did not. D. The Sixth Schedule applied to the tribal areas of Assam and offered a fair degree of self-government through autonomous districts and district and regional councils exercising some legislative and judicial functions within the jurisdiction of the legislature and Parliament, while the Fifth Schedule together with Tribal Advisory Councils, Article 46 and reservations covered the other Scheduled Areas where tribal communities were dispersed minorities; the two Schedules answer two different demographic problems, they are never interchangeable, and their detailed provisions belong to the Polity owner rather than to this historical one.

Answer: A. Explanation: Nehru laid down five broad guidelines for government policy: tribal people should develop along the lines of their own genius with no imposition or compulsion from outside and no superiority complex among non-tribals; tribal rights in land and forest should be respected and no outsider should be able to take possession of tribal land; tribal languages should be encouraged and the conditions for their flourishing safeguarded; administration should rely on the tribal people themselves with administrators recruited and trained from among them and as few outsiders as possible; and there should be no over-administration of tribal areas. 'Tribal Panchsheel' is a later label for these guidelines and no exact proclamation year may be attached to it. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q30. Which chronology card should be filed under The five guidelines later labelled the Tribal Panchsheel?

A. The tribes of north-eastern India, consisting of over a hundred groups speaking a wide variety of languages, differed from tribal communities elsewhere because they formed the overwhelming majority in the areas they inhabited, because British administration had given their areas a separate status inside Assam and excluded plains outsiders from acquiring land, and because they had almost no political or cultural contact with the national movement, so that the common bonds forged in the anti-imperialist struggle had little purchase there and some missionaries and other foreigners even promoted sentiment for separate states immediately after independence. B. Nehru laid down five broad guidelines for government policy: tribal people should develop along the lines of their own genius with no imposition or compulsion from outside and no superiority complex among non-tribals; tribal rights in land and forest should be respected and no outsider should be able to take possession of tribal land; tribal languages should be encouraged and the conditions for their flourishing safeguarded; administration should rely on the tribal people themselves with administrators recruited and trained from among them and as few outsiders as possible; and there should be no over-administration of tribal areas. 'Tribal Panchsheel' is a later label for these guidelines and no exact proclamation year may be attached to it. C. In spite of the constitutional safeguards the tribals' progress and welfare was slow and even dismal outside the North-East, because well-intentioned measures were weakly executed, central and state policies diverged, Tribal Advisory Councils did not function effectively, funds allocated for tribal welfare went unspent or were misapplied, laws against transfer of land to outsiders were evaded, the rapid extension of mines and industries displaced communities, deforestation and curtailed forest access destroyed livelihoods, and an emerging tribal elite captured much of what development did occur; the honest verdict is therefore split between political accommodation that succeeded and development that did not. D. The Sixth Schedule applied to the tribal areas of Assam and offered a fair degree of self-government through autonomous districts and district and regional councils exercising some legislative and judicial functions within the jurisdiction of the legislature and Parliament, while the Fifth Schedule together with Tribal Advisory Councils, Article 46 and reservations covered the other Scheduled Areas where tribal communities were dispersed minorities; the two Schedules answer two different demographic problems, they are never interchangeable, and their detailed provisions belong to the Polity owner rather than to this historical one.

Answer: B. Explanation: Nehru laid down five broad guidelines for government policy: tribal people should develop along the lines of their own genius with no imposition or compulsion from outside and no superiority complex among non-tribals; tribal rights in land and forest should be respected and no outsider should be able to take possession of tribal land; tribal languages should be encouraged and the conditions for their flourishing safeguarded; administration should rely on the tribal people themselves with administrators recruited and trained from among them and as few outsiders as possible; and there should be no over-administration of tribal areas. 'Tribal Panchsheel' is a later label for these guidelines and no exact proclamation year may be attached to it. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q31. Which option should a candidate retain when revising The five guidelines later labelled the Tribal Panchsheel?

A. In spite of the constitutional safeguards the tribals' progress and welfare was slow and even dismal outside the North-East, because well-intentioned measures were weakly executed, central and state policies diverged, Tribal Advisory Councils did not function effectively, funds allocated for tribal welfare went unspent or were misapplied, laws against transfer of land to outsiders were evaded, the rapid extension of mines and industries displaced communities, deforestation and curtailed forest access destroyed livelihoods, and an emerging tribal elite captured much of what development did occur; the honest verdict is therefore split between political accommodation that succeeded and development that did not. B. The North-East Frontier Agency was created in 1948 out of the border areas of Assam as a Union Territory outside the jurisdiction of Assam and placed under a special administration manned by a specially recruited cadre asked to implement development without disturbing the social and cultural pattern of life, and it was there that the Nehru-Elwin policy was implemented best; the objective of the Sixth Schedule was likewise to enable tribal people to live according to their own ways, with the Government of India willing to amend the provisions further to promote autonomy while refusing to countenance secession or violence. C. Nehru laid down five broad guidelines for government policy: tribal people should develop along the lines of their own genius with no imposition or compulsion from outside and no superiority complex among non-tribals; tribal rights in land and forest should be respected and no outsider should be able to take possession of tribal land; tribal languages should be encouraged and the conditions for their flourishing safeguarded; administration should rely on the tribal people themselves with administrators recruited and trained from among them and as few outsiders as possible; and there should be no over-administration of tribal areas. 'Tribal Panchsheel' is a later label for these guidelines and no exact proclamation year may be attached to it. D. The tribes of north-eastern India, consisting of over a hundred groups speaking a wide variety of languages, differed from tribal communities elsewhere because they formed the overwhelming majority in the areas they inhabited, because British administration had given their areas a separate status inside Assam and excluded plains outsiders from acquiring land, and because they had almost no political or cultural contact with the national movement, so that the common bonds forged in the anti-imperialist struggle had little purchase there and some missionaries and other foreigners even promoted sentiment for separate states immediately after independence.

Answer: C. Explanation: Nehru laid down five broad guidelines for government policy: tribal people should develop along the lines of their own genius with no imposition or compulsion from outside and no superiority complex among non-tribals; tribal rights in land and forest should be respected and no outsider should be able to take possession of tribal land; tribal languages should be encouraged and the conditions for their flourishing safeguarded; administration should rely on the tribal people themselves with administrators recruited and trained from among them and as few outsiders as possible; and there should be no over-administration of tribal areas. 'Tribal Panchsheel' is a later label for these guidelines and no exact proclamation year may be attached to it. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q32. Which statement avoids a common matching trap about The five guidelines later labelled the Tribal Panchsheel?

A. The North-East Frontier Agency was created in 1948 out of the border areas of Assam as a Union Territory outside the jurisdiction of Assam and placed under a special administration manned by a specially recruited cadre asked to implement development without disturbing the social and cultural pattern of life, and it was there that the Nehru-Elwin policy was implemented best; the objective of the Sixth Schedule was likewise to enable tribal people to live according to their own ways, with the Government of India willing to amend the provisions further to promote autonomy while refusing to countenance secession or violence. B. The tribes of north-eastern India, consisting of over a hundred groups speaking a wide variety of languages, differed from tribal communities elsewhere because they formed the overwhelming majority in the areas they inhabited, because British administration had given their areas a separate status inside Assam and excluded plains outsiders from acquiring land, and because they had almost no political or cultural contact with the national movement, so that the common bonds forged in the anti-imperialist struggle had little purchase there and some missionaries and other foreigners even promoted sentiment for separate states immediately after independence. C. A section of the Naga leadership opposed integration and rose in rebellion under A.Z. Phizo demanding complete independence, and in 1955 these separatists declared the formation of an independent government and launched a violent insurrection; the Government of India answered on two tracks at once, refusing absolutely to concede secession or to negotiate with those who would not abandon independence and armed rebellion, while simultaneously offering a large degree of cultural and administrative autonomy to moderate, non-violent and non-secessionist Naga leaders. D. Nehru laid down five broad guidelines for government policy: tribal people should develop along the lines of their own genius with no imposition or compulsion from outside and no superiority complex among non-tribals; tribal rights in land and forest should be respected and no outsider should be able to take possession of tribal land; tribal languages should be encouraged and the conditions for their flourishing safeguarded; administration should rely on the tribal people themselves with administrators recruited and trained from among them and as few outsiders as possible; and there should be no over-administration of tribal areas. 'Tribal Panchsheel' is a later label for these guidelines and no exact proclamation year may be attached to it.

Answer: D. Explanation: Nehru laid down five broad guidelines for government policy: tribal people should develop along the lines of their own genius with no imposition or compulsion from outside and no superiority complex among non-tribals; tribal rights in land and forest should be respected and no outsider should be able to take possession of tribal land; tribal languages should be encouraged and the conditions for their flourishing safeguarded; administration should rely on the tribal people themselves with administrators recruited and trained from among them and as few outsiders as possible; and there should be no over-administration of tribal areas. 'Tribal Panchsheel' is a later label for these guidelines and no exact proclamation year may be attached to it. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q33. Which statement correctly identifies Article 46 and the protective machinery?

A. The Constitution gave the policy shape by directing under Article 46 that the state promote with special care the educational and economic interests of the tribal people and protect them from social injustice and all forms of exploitation; governors of states containing tribal areas received a special responsibility including the power to modify central and state laws in their application to those areas and to frame regulations protecting tribal land rights and guarding against money-lenders, full political rights were extended, seats in the legislatures and posts in the services were reserved for the Scheduled Tribes, Tribal Advisory Councils were provided for in all states containing tribal areas, and a Commissioner for Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes was appointed by the President to investigate whether the safeguards were being observed. B. In spite of the constitutional safeguards the tribals' progress and welfare was slow and even dismal outside the North-East, because well-intentioned measures were weakly executed, central and state policies diverged, Tribal Advisory Councils did not function effectively, funds allocated for tribal welfare went unspent or were misapplied, laws against transfer of land to outsiders were evaded, the rapid extension of mines and industries displaced communities, deforestation and curtailed forest access destroyed livelihoods, and an emerging tribal elite captured much of what development did occur; the honest verdict is therefore split between political accommodation that succeeded and development that did not. C. The Sixth Schedule applied to the tribal areas of Assam and offered a fair degree of self-government through autonomous districts and district and regional councils exercising some legislative and judicial functions within the jurisdiction of the legislature and Parliament, while the Fifth Schedule together with Tribal Advisory Councils, Article 46 and reservations covered the other Scheduled Areas where tribal communities were dispersed minorities; the two Schedules answer two different demographic problems, they are never interchangeable, and their detailed provisions belong to the Polity owner rather than to this historical one. D. The tribes of north-eastern India, consisting of over a hundred groups speaking a wide variety of languages, differed from tribal communities elsewhere because they formed the overwhelming majority in the areas they inhabited, because British administration had given their areas a separate status inside Assam and excluded plains outsiders from acquiring land, and because they had almost no political or cultural contact with the national movement, so that the common bonds forged in the anti-imperialist struggle had little purchase there and some missionaries and other foreigners even promoted sentiment for separate states immediately after independence.

Answer: A. Explanation: The Constitution gave the policy shape by directing under Article 46 that the state promote with special care the educational and economic interests of the tribal people and protect them from social injustice and all forms of exploitation; governors of states containing tribal areas received a special responsibility including the power to modify central and state laws in their application to those areas and to frame regulations protecting tribal land rights and guarding against money-lenders, full political rights were extended, seats in the legislatures and posts in the services were reserved for the Scheduled Tribes, Tribal Advisory Councils were provided for in all states containing tribal areas, and a Commissioner for Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes was appointed by the President to investigate whether the safeguards were being observed. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q34. Which chronology card should be filed under Article 46 and the protective machinery?

A. The North-East Frontier Agency was created in 1948 out of the border areas of Assam as a Union Territory outside the jurisdiction of Assam and placed under a special administration manned by a specially recruited cadre asked to implement development without disturbing the social and cultural pattern of life, and it was there that the Nehru-Elwin policy was implemented best; the objective of the Sixth Schedule was likewise to enable tribal people to live according to their own ways, with the Government of India willing to amend the provisions further to promote autonomy while refusing to countenance secession or violence. B. The Constitution gave the policy shape by directing under Article 46 that the state promote with special care the educational and economic interests of the tribal people and protect them from social injustice and all forms of exploitation; governors of states containing tribal areas received a special responsibility including the power to modify central and state laws in their application to those areas and to frame regulations protecting tribal land rights and guarding against money-lenders, full political rights were extended, seats in the legislatures and posts in the services were reserved for the Scheduled Tribes, Tribal Advisory Councils were provided for in all states containing tribal areas, and a Commissioner for Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes was appointed by the President to investigate whether the safeguards were being observed. C. In spite of the constitutional safeguards the tribals' progress and welfare was slow and even dismal outside the North-East, because well-intentioned measures were weakly executed, central and state policies diverged, Tribal Advisory Councils did not function effectively, funds allocated for tribal welfare went unspent or were misapplied, laws against transfer of land to outsiders were evaded, the rapid extension of mines and industries displaced communities, deforestation and curtailed forest access destroyed livelihoods, and an emerging tribal elite captured much of what development did occur; the honest verdict is therefore split between political accommodation that succeeded and development that did not. D. The tribes of north-eastern India, consisting of over a hundred groups speaking a wide variety of languages, differed from tribal communities elsewhere because they formed the overwhelming majority in the areas they inhabited, because British administration had given their areas a separate status inside Assam and excluded plains outsiders from acquiring land, and because they had almost no political or cultural contact with the national movement, so that the common bonds forged in the anti-imperialist struggle had little purchase there and some missionaries and other foreigners even promoted sentiment for separate states immediately after independence.

Answer: B. Explanation: The Constitution gave the policy shape by directing under Article 46 that the state promote with special care the educational and economic interests of the tribal people and protect them from social injustice and all forms of exploitation; governors of states containing tribal areas received a special responsibility including the power to modify central and state laws in their application to those areas and to frame regulations protecting tribal land rights and guarding against money-lenders, full political rights were extended, seats in the legislatures and posts in the services were reserved for the Scheduled Tribes, Tribal Advisory Councils were provided for in all states containing tribal areas, and a Commissioner for Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes was appointed by the President to investigate whether the safeguards were being observed. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q35. Which option should a candidate retain when revising Article 46 and the protective machinery?

A. A section of the Naga leadership opposed integration and rose in rebellion under A.Z. Phizo demanding complete independence, and in 1955 these separatists declared the formation of an independent government and launched a violent insurrection; the Government of India answered on two tracks at once, refusing absolutely to concede secession or to negotiate with those who would not abandon independence and armed rebellion, while simultaneously offering a large degree of cultural and administrative autonomy to moderate, non-violent and non-secessionist Naga leaders. B. The North-East Frontier Agency was created in 1948 out of the border areas of Assam as a Union Territory outside the jurisdiction of Assam and placed under a special administration manned by a specially recruited cadre asked to implement development without disturbing the social and cultural pattern of life, and it was there that the Nehru-Elwin policy was implemented best; the objective of the Sixth Schedule was likewise to enable tribal people to live according to their own ways, with the Government of India willing to amend the provisions further to promote autonomy while refusing to countenance secession or violence. C. The Constitution gave the policy shape by directing under Article 46 that the state promote with special care the educational and economic interests of the tribal people and protect them from social injustice and all forms of exploitation; governors of states containing tribal areas received a special responsibility including the power to modify central and state laws in their application to those areas and to frame regulations protecting tribal land rights and guarding against money-lenders, full political rights were extended, seats in the legislatures and posts in the services were reserved for the Scheduled Tribes, Tribal Advisory Councils were provided for in all states containing tribal areas, and a Commissioner for Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes was appointed by the President to investigate whether the safeguards were being observed. D. The tribes of north-eastern India, consisting of over a hundred groups speaking a wide variety of languages, differed from tribal communities elsewhere because they formed the overwhelming majority in the areas they inhabited, because British administration had given their areas a separate status inside Assam and excluded plains outsiders from acquiring land, and because they had almost no political or cultural contact with the national movement, so that the common bonds forged in the anti-imperialist struggle had little purchase there and some missionaries and other foreigners even promoted sentiment for separate states immediately after independence.

Answer: C. Explanation: The Constitution gave the policy shape by directing under Article 46 that the state promote with special care the educational and economic interests of the tribal people and protect them from social injustice and all forms of exploitation; governors of states containing tribal areas received a special responsibility including the power to modify central and state laws in their application to those areas and to frame regulations protecting tribal land rights and guarding against money-lenders, full political rights were extended, seats in the legislatures and posts in the services were reserved for the Scheduled Tribes, Tribal Advisory Councils were provided for in all states containing tribal areas, and a Commissioner for Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes was appointed by the President to investigate whether the safeguards were being observed. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q36. Which statement avoids a common matching trap about Article 46 and the protective machinery?

A. The army was sent to Nagaland in early 1956 to restore peace and order, the back of the armed rebellion was broken by the middle of 1957, moderate Naga leaders headed by Dr Imkongliba Ao then came to the fore and negotiated for a state within the Indian union, and through a series of intermediate steps the state of Nagaland came into existence in 1963, after which politics in Nagaland followed the pattern of other states of the union; the sequence is coercion followed by political accommodation, never coercion alone and never accommodation alone. B. The North-East Frontier Agency was created in 1948 out of the border areas of Assam as a Union Territory outside the jurisdiction of Assam and placed under a special administration manned by a specially recruited cadre asked to implement development without disturbing the social and cultural pattern of life, and it was there that the Nehru-Elwin policy was implemented best; the objective of the Sixth Schedule was likewise to enable tribal people to live according to their own ways, with the Government of India willing to amend the provisions further to promote autonomy while refusing to countenance secession or violence. C. A section of the Naga leadership opposed integration and rose in rebellion under A.Z. Phizo demanding complete independence, and in 1955 these separatists declared the formation of an independent government and launched a violent insurrection; the Government of India answered on two tracks at once, refusing absolutely to concede secession or to negotiate with those who would not abandon independence and armed rebellion, while simultaneously offering a large degree of cultural and administrative autonomy to moderate, non-violent and non-secessionist Naga leaders. D. The Constitution gave the policy shape by directing under Article 46 that the state promote with special care the educational and economic interests of the tribal people and protect them from social injustice and all forms of exploitation; governors of states containing tribal areas received a special responsibility including the power to modify central and state laws in their application to those areas and to frame regulations protecting tribal land rights and guarding against money-lenders, full political rights were extended, seats in the legislatures and posts in the services were reserved for the Scheduled Tribes, Tribal Advisory Councils were provided for in all states containing tribal areas, and a Commissioner for Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes was appointed by the President to investigate whether the safeguards were being observed.

Answer: D. Explanation: The Constitution gave the policy shape by directing under Article 46 that the state promote with special care the educational and economic interests of the tribal people and protect them from social injustice and all forms of exploitation; governors of states containing tribal areas received a special responsibility including the power to modify central and state laws in their application to those areas and to frame regulations protecting tribal land rights and guarding against money-lenders, full political rights were extended, seats in the legislatures and posts in the services were reserved for the Scheduled Tribes, Tribal Advisory Councils were provided for in all states containing tribal areas, and a Commissioner for Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes was appointed by the President to investigate whether the safeguards were being observed. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q37. Which statement correctly identifies Fifth Schedule and Sixth Schedule as different instruments?

A. The Sixth Schedule applied to the tribal areas of Assam and offered a fair degree of self-government through autonomous districts and district and regional councils exercising some legislative and judicial functions within the jurisdiction of the legislature and Parliament, while the Fifth Schedule together with Tribal Advisory Councils, Article 46 and reservations covered the other Scheduled Areas where tribal communities were dispersed minorities; the two Schedules answer two different demographic problems, they are never interchangeable, and their detailed provisions belong to the Polity owner rather than to this historical one. B. The tribes of north-eastern India, consisting of over a hundred groups speaking a wide variety of languages, differed from tribal communities elsewhere because they formed the overwhelming majority in the areas they inhabited, because British administration had given their areas a separate status inside Assam and excluded plains outsiders from acquiring land, and because they had almost no political or cultural contact with the national movement, so that the common bonds forged in the anti-imperialist struggle had little purchase there and some missionaries and other foreigners even promoted sentiment for separate states immediately after independence. C. In spite of the constitutional safeguards the tribals' progress and welfare was slow and even dismal outside the North-East, because well-intentioned measures were weakly executed, central and state policies diverged, Tribal Advisory Councils did not function effectively, funds allocated for tribal welfare went unspent or were misapplied, laws against transfer of land to outsiders were evaded, the rapid extension of mines and industries displaced communities, deforestation and curtailed forest access destroyed livelihoods, and an emerging tribal elite captured much of what development did occur; the honest verdict is therefore split between political accommodation that succeeded and development that did not. D. The North-East Frontier Agency was created in 1948 out of the border areas of Assam as a Union Territory outside the jurisdiction of Assam and placed under a special administration manned by a specially recruited cadre asked to implement development without disturbing the social and cultural pattern of life, and it was there that the Nehru-Elwin policy was implemented best; the objective of the Sixth Schedule was likewise to enable tribal people to live according to their own ways, with the Government of India willing to amend the provisions further to promote autonomy while refusing to countenance secession or violence.

Answer: A. Explanation: The Sixth Schedule applied to the tribal areas of Assam and offered a fair degree of self-government through autonomous districts and district and regional councils exercising some legislative and judicial functions within the jurisdiction of the legislature and Parliament, while the Fifth Schedule together with Tribal Advisory Councils, Article 46 and reservations covered the other Scheduled Areas where tribal communities were dispersed minorities; the two Schedules answer two different demographic problems, they are never interchangeable, and their detailed provisions belong to the Polity owner rather than to this historical one. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q38. Which chronology card should be filed under Fifth Schedule and Sixth Schedule as different instruments?

A. A section of the Naga leadership opposed integration and rose in rebellion under A.Z. Phizo demanding complete independence, and in 1955 these separatists declared the formation of an independent government and launched a violent insurrection; the Government of India answered on two tracks at once, refusing absolutely to concede secession or to negotiate with those who would not abandon independence and armed rebellion, while simultaneously offering a large degree of cultural and administrative autonomy to moderate, non-violent and non-secessionist Naga leaders. B. The Sixth Schedule applied to the tribal areas of Assam and offered a fair degree of self-government through autonomous districts and district and regional councils exercising some legislative and judicial functions within the jurisdiction of the legislature and Parliament, while the Fifth Schedule together with Tribal Advisory Councils, Article 46 and reservations covered the other Scheduled Areas where tribal communities were dispersed minorities; the two Schedules answer two different demographic problems, they are never interchangeable, and their detailed provisions belong to the Polity owner rather than to this historical one. C. The North-East Frontier Agency was created in 1948 out of the border areas of Assam as a Union Territory outside the jurisdiction of Assam and placed under a special administration manned by a specially recruited cadre asked to implement development without disturbing the social and cultural pattern of life, and it was there that the Nehru-Elwin policy was implemented best; the objective of the Sixth Schedule was likewise to enable tribal people to live according to their own ways, with the Government of India willing to amend the provisions further to promote autonomy while refusing to countenance secession or violence. D. The tribes of north-eastern India, consisting of over a hundred groups speaking a wide variety of languages, differed from tribal communities elsewhere because they formed the overwhelming majority in the areas they inhabited, because British administration had given their areas a separate status inside Assam and excluded plains outsiders from acquiring land, and because they had almost no political or cultural contact with the national movement, so that the common bonds forged in the anti-imperialist struggle had little purchase there and some missionaries and other foreigners even promoted sentiment for separate states immediately after independence.

Answer: B. Explanation: The Sixth Schedule applied to the tribal areas of Assam and offered a fair degree of self-government through autonomous districts and district and regional councils exercising some legislative and judicial functions within the jurisdiction of the legislature and Parliament, while the Fifth Schedule together with Tribal Advisory Councils, Article 46 and reservations covered the other Scheduled Areas where tribal communities were dispersed minorities; the two Schedules answer two different demographic problems, they are never interchangeable, and their detailed provisions belong to the Polity owner rather than to this historical one. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q39. Which option should a candidate retain when revising Fifth Schedule and Sixth Schedule as different instruments?

A. The army was sent to Nagaland in early 1956 to restore peace and order, the back of the armed rebellion was broken by the middle of 1957, moderate Naga leaders headed by Dr Imkongliba Ao then came to the fore and negotiated for a state within the Indian union, and through a series of intermediate steps the state of Nagaland came into existence in 1963, after which politics in Nagaland followed the pattern of other states of the union; the sequence is coercion followed by political accommodation, never coercion alone and never accommodation alone. B. A section of the Naga leadership opposed integration and rose in rebellion under A.Z. Phizo demanding complete independence, and in 1955 these separatists declared the formation of an independent government and launched a violent insurrection; the Government of India answered on two tracks at once, refusing absolutely to concede secession or to negotiate with those who would not abandon independence and armed rebellion, while simultaneously offering a large degree of cultural and administrative autonomy to moderate, non-violent and non-secessionist Naga leaders. C. The Sixth Schedule applied to the tribal areas of Assam and offered a fair degree of self-government through autonomous districts and district and regional councils exercising some legislative and judicial functions within the jurisdiction of the legislature and Parliament, while the Fifth Schedule together with Tribal Advisory Councils, Article 46 and reservations covered the other Scheduled Areas where tribal communities were dispersed minorities; the two Schedules answer two different demographic problems, they are never interchangeable, and their detailed provisions belong to the Polity owner rather than to this historical one. D. The North-East Frontier Agency was created in 1948 out of the border areas of Assam as a Union Territory outside the jurisdiction of Assam and placed under a special administration manned by a specially recruited cadre asked to implement development without disturbing the social and cultural pattern of life, and it was there that the Nehru-Elwin policy was implemented best; the objective of the Sixth Schedule was likewise to enable tribal people to live according to their own ways, with the Government of India willing to amend the provisions further to promote autonomy while refusing to countenance secession or violence.

Answer: C. Explanation: The Sixth Schedule applied to the tribal areas of Assam and offered a fair degree of self-government through autonomous districts and district and regional councils exercising some legislative and judicial functions within the jurisdiction of the legislature and Parliament, while the Fifth Schedule together with Tribal Advisory Councils, Article 46 and reservations covered the other Scheduled Areas where tribal communities were dispersed minorities; the two Schedules answer two different demographic problems, they are never interchangeable, and their detailed provisions belong to the Polity owner rather than to this historical one. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q40. Which statement avoids a common matching trap about Fifth Schedule and Sixth Schedule as different instruments?

A. The army was sent to Nagaland in early 1956 to restore peace and order, the back of the armed rebellion was broken by the middle of 1957, moderate Naga leaders headed by Dr Imkongliba Ao then came to the fore and negotiated for a state within the Indian union, and through a series of intermediate steps the state of Nagaland came into existence in 1963, after which politics in Nagaland followed the pattern of other states of the union; the sequence is coercion followed by political accommodation, never coercion alone and never accommodation alone. B. A section of the Naga leadership opposed integration and rose in rebellion under A.Z. Phizo demanding complete independence, and in 1955 these separatists declared the formation of an independent government and launched a violent insurrection; the Government of India answered on two tracks at once, refusing absolutely to concede secession or to negotiate with those who would not abandon independence and armed rebellion, while simultaneously offering a large degree of cultural and administrative autonomy to moderate, non-violent and non-secessionist Naga leaders. C. Resentment against the Assam government mounted among the hill tribes, who feared assimilation by what they saw as a policy of Assamization, and the demand for a separate hill state gained decisive strength when Assamese leaders moved in 1960 to make Assamese the sole official language of the state; the hill parties merged into the All Party Hill Leaders Conference in 1960, the Assam Official Language Act provoked hartals, demonstrations and a major agitation, the advocates of a separate state won overwhelmingly in the tribal areas in the 1962 elections and boycotted the Assembly, and in 1969 a constitutional amendment carved out Meghalaya as a state within a state with complete autonomy except for law and order. D. The Sixth Schedule applied to the tribal areas of Assam and offered a fair degree of self-government through autonomous districts and district and regional councils exercising some legislative and judicial functions within the jurisdiction of the legislature and Parliament, while the Fifth Schedule together with Tribal Advisory Councils, Article 46 and reservations covered the other Scheduled Areas where tribal communities were dispersed minorities; the two Schedules answer two different demographic problems, they are never interchangeable, and their detailed provisions belong to the Polity owner rather than to this historical one.

Answer: D. Explanation: The Sixth Schedule applied to the tribal areas of Assam and offered a fair degree of self-government through autonomous districts and district and regional councils exercising some legislative and judicial functions within the jurisdiction of the legislature and Parliament, while the Fifth Schedule together with Tribal Advisory Councils, Article 46 and reservations covered the other Scheduled Areas where tribal communities were dispersed minorities; the two Schedules answer two different demographic problems, they are never interchangeable, and their detailed provisions belong to the Polity owner rather than to this historical one. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q41. Which statement correctly identifies The implementation shortfall behind constitutional intent?

A. In spite of the constitutional safeguards the tribals' progress and welfare was slow and even dismal outside the North-East, because well-intentioned measures were weakly executed, central and state policies diverged, Tribal Advisory Councils did not function effectively, funds allocated for tribal welfare went unspent or were misapplied, laws against transfer of land to outsiders were evaded, the rapid extension of mines and industries displaced communities, deforestation and curtailed forest access destroyed livelihoods, and an emerging tribal elite captured much of what development did occur; the honest verdict is therefore split between political accommodation that succeeded and development that did not. B. The North-East Frontier Agency was created in 1948 out of the border areas of Assam as a Union Territory outside the jurisdiction of Assam and placed under a special administration manned by a specially recruited cadre asked to implement development without disturbing the social and cultural pattern of life, and it was there that the Nehru-Elwin policy was implemented best; the objective of the Sixth Schedule was likewise to enable tribal people to live according to their own ways, with the Government of India willing to amend the provisions further to promote autonomy while refusing to countenance secession or violence. C. The tribes of north-eastern India, consisting of over a hundred groups speaking a wide variety of languages, differed from tribal communities elsewhere because they formed the overwhelming majority in the areas they inhabited, because British administration had given their areas a separate status inside Assam and excluded plains outsiders from acquiring land, and because they had almost no political or cultural contact with the national movement, so that the common bonds forged in the anti-imperialist struggle had little purchase there and some missionaries and other foreigners even promoted sentiment for separate states immediately after independence. D. A section of the Naga leadership opposed integration and rose in rebellion under A.Z. Phizo demanding complete independence, and in 1955 these separatists declared the formation of an independent government and launched a violent insurrection; the Government of India answered on two tracks at once, refusing absolutely to concede secession or to negotiate with those who would not abandon independence and armed rebellion, while simultaneously offering a large degree of cultural and administrative autonomy to moderate, non-violent and non-secessionist Naga leaders.

Answer: A. Explanation: In spite of the constitutional safeguards the tribals' progress and welfare was slow and even dismal outside the North-East, because well-intentioned measures were weakly executed, central and state policies diverged, Tribal Advisory Councils did not function effectively, funds allocated for tribal welfare went unspent or were misapplied, laws against transfer of land to outsiders were evaded, the rapid extension of mines and industries displaced communities, deforestation and curtailed forest access destroyed livelihoods, and an emerging tribal elite captured much of what development did occur; the honest verdict is therefore split between political accommodation that succeeded and development that did not. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q42. Which chronology card should be filed under The implementation shortfall behind constitutional intent?

A. The army was sent to Nagaland in early 1956 to restore peace and order, the back of the armed rebellion was broken by the middle of 1957, moderate Naga leaders headed by Dr Imkongliba Ao then came to the fore and negotiated for a state within the Indian union, and through a series of intermediate steps the state of Nagaland came into existence in 1963, after which politics in Nagaland followed the pattern of other states of the union; the sequence is coercion followed by political accommodation, never coercion alone and never accommodation alone. B. In spite of the constitutional safeguards the tribals' progress and welfare was slow and even dismal outside the North-East, because well-intentioned measures were weakly executed, central and state policies diverged, Tribal Advisory Councils did not function effectively, funds allocated for tribal welfare went unspent or were misapplied, laws against transfer of land to outsiders were evaded, the rapid extension of mines and industries displaced communities, deforestation and curtailed forest access destroyed livelihoods, and an emerging tribal elite captured much of what development did occur; the honest verdict is therefore split between political accommodation that succeeded and development that did not. C. The North-East Frontier Agency was created in 1948 out of the border areas of Assam as a Union Territory outside the jurisdiction of Assam and placed under a special administration manned by a specially recruited cadre asked to implement development without disturbing the social and cultural pattern of life, and it was there that the Nehru-Elwin policy was implemented best; the objective of the Sixth Schedule was likewise to enable tribal people to live according to their own ways, with the Government of India willing to amend the provisions further to promote autonomy while refusing to countenance secession or violence. D. A section of the Naga leadership opposed integration and rose in rebellion under A.Z. Phizo demanding complete independence, and in 1955 these separatists declared the formation of an independent government and launched a violent insurrection; the Government of India answered on two tracks at once, refusing absolutely to concede secession or to negotiate with those who would not abandon independence and armed rebellion, while simultaneously offering a large degree of cultural and administrative autonomy to moderate, non-violent and non-secessionist Naga leaders.

Answer: B. Explanation: In spite of the constitutional safeguards the tribals' progress and welfare was slow and even dismal outside the North-East, because well-intentioned measures were weakly executed, central and state policies diverged, Tribal Advisory Councils did not function effectively, funds allocated for tribal welfare went unspent or were misapplied, laws against transfer of land to outsiders were evaded, the rapid extension of mines and industries displaced communities, deforestation and curtailed forest access destroyed livelihoods, and an emerging tribal elite captured much of what development did occur; the honest verdict is therefore split between political accommodation that succeeded and development that did not. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q43. Which option should a candidate retain when revising The implementation shortfall behind constitutional intent?

A. Resentment against the Assam government mounted among the hill tribes, who feared assimilation by what they saw as a policy of Assamization, and the demand for a separate hill state gained decisive strength when Assamese leaders moved in 1960 to make Assamese the sole official language of the state; the hill parties merged into the All Party Hill Leaders Conference in 1960, the Assam Official Language Act provoked hartals, demonstrations and a major agitation, the advocates of a separate state won overwhelmingly in the tribal areas in the 1962 elections and boycotted the Assembly, and in 1969 a constitutional amendment carved out Meghalaya as a state within a state with complete autonomy except for law and order. B. A section of the Naga leadership opposed integration and rose in rebellion under A.Z. Phizo demanding complete independence, and in 1955 these separatists declared the formation of an independent government and launched a violent insurrection; the Government of India answered on two tracks at once, refusing absolutely to concede secession or to negotiate with those who would not abandon independence and armed rebellion, while simultaneously offering a large degree of cultural and administrative autonomy to moderate, non-violent and non-secessionist Naga leaders. C. In spite of the constitutional safeguards the tribals' progress and welfare was slow and even dismal outside the North-East, because well-intentioned measures were weakly executed, central and state policies diverged, Tribal Advisory Councils did not function effectively, funds allocated for tribal welfare went unspent or were misapplied, laws against transfer of land to outsiders were evaded, the rapid extension of mines and industries displaced communities, deforestation and curtailed forest access destroyed livelihoods, and an emerging tribal elite captured much of what development did occur; the honest verdict is therefore split between political accommodation that succeeded and development that did not. D. The army was sent to Nagaland in early 1956 to restore peace and order, the back of the armed rebellion was broken by the middle of 1957, moderate Naga leaders headed by Dr Imkongliba Ao then came to the fore and negotiated for a state within the Indian union, and through a series of intermediate steps the state of Nagaland came into existence in 1963, after which politics in Nagaland followed the pattern of other states of the union; the sequence is coercion followed by political accommodation, never coercion alone and never accommodation alone.

Answer: C. Explanation: In spite of the constitutional safeguards the tribals' progress and welfare was slow and even dismal outside the North-East, because well-intentioned measures were weakly executed, central and state policies diverged, Tribal Advisory Councils did not function effectively, funds allocated for tribal welfare went unspent or were misapplied, laws against transfer of land to outsiders were evaded, the rapid extension of mines and industries displaced communities, deforestation and curtailed forest access destroyed livelihoods, and an emerging tribal elite captured much of what development did occur; the honest verdict is therefore split between political accommodation that succeeded and development that did not. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q44. Which statement avoids a common matching trap about The implementation shortfall behind constitutional intent?

A. The army was sent to Nagaland in early 1956 to restore peace and order, the back of the armed rebellion was broken by the middle of 1957, moderate Naga leaders headed by Dr Imkongliba Ao then came to the fore and negotiated for a state within the Indian union, and through a series of intermediate steps the state of Nagaland came into existence in 1963, after which politics in Nagaland followed the pattern of other states of the union; the sequence is coercion followed by political accommodation, never coercion alone and never accommodation alone. B. Resentment against the Assam government mounted among the hill tribes, who feared assimilation by what they saw as a policy of Assamization, and the demand for a separate hill state gained decisive strength when Assamese leaders moved in 1960 to make Assamese the sole official language of the state; the hill parties merged into the All Party Hill Leaders Conference in 1960, the Assam Official Language Act provoked hartals, demonstrations and a major agitation, the advocates of a separate state won overwhelmingly in the tribal areas in the 1962 elections and boycotted the Assembly, and in 1969 a constitutional amendment carved out Meghalaya as a state within a state with complete autonomy except for law and order. C. As part of the reorganisation of the North-East in 1972, Meghalaya became a separate state incorporating the Garo, Khasi and Jaintia tribes, the Union Territories of Manipur and Tripura were simultaneously granted statehood, and NEFA was renamed Arunachal Pradesh; the transition to statehood in the cases of Meghalaya, Manipur, Tripura and Arunachal Pradesh was on the owners' account quite smooth, and Arunachal Pradesh itself attained statehood in 1987. D. In spite of the constitutional safeguards the tribals' progress and welfare was slow and even dismal outside the North-East, because well-intentioned measures were weakly executed, central and state policies diverged, Tribal Advisory Councils did not function effectively, funds allocated for tribal welfare went unspent or were misapplied, laws against transfer of land to outsiders were evaded, the rapid extension of mines and industries displaced communities, deforestation and curtailed forest access destroyed livelihoods, and an emerging tribal elite captured much of what development did occur; the honest verdict is therefore split between political accommodation that succeeded and development that did not.

Answer: D. Explanation: In spite of the constitutional safeguards the tribals' progress and welfare was slow and even dismal outside the North-East, because well-intentioned measures were weakly executed, central and state policies diverged, Tribal Advisory Councils did not function effectively, funds allocated for tribal welfare went unspent or were misapplied, laws against transfer of land to outsiders were evaded, the rapid extension of mines and industries displaced communities, deforestation and curtailed forest access destroyed livelihoods, and an emerging tribal elite captured much of what development did occur; the honest verdict is therefore split between political accommodation that succeeded and development that did not. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q45. Which statement correctly identifies Why the North-East was a different problem?

A. The tribes of north-eastern India, consisting of over a hundred groups speaking a wide variety of languages, differed from tribal communities elsewhere because they formed the overwhelming majority in the areas they inhabited, because British administration had given their areas a separate status inside Assam and excluded plains outsiders from acquiring land, and because they had almost no political or cultural contact with the national movement, so that the common bonds forged in the anti-imperialist struggle had little purchase there and some missionaries and other foreigners even promoted sentiment for separate states immediately after independence. B. The army was sent to Nagaland in early 1956 to restore peace and order, the back of the armed rebellion was broken by the middle of 1957, moderate Naga leaders headed by Dr Imkongliba Ao then came to the fore and negotiated for a state within the Indian union, and through a series of intermediate steps the state of Nagaland came into existence in 1963, after which politics in Nagaland followed the pattern of other states of the union; the sequence is coercion followed by political accommodation, never coercion alone and never accommodation alone. C. A section of the Naga leadership opposed integration and rose in rebellion under A.Z. Phizo demanding complete independence, and in 1955 these separatists declared the formation of an independent government and launched a violent insurrection; the Government of India answered on two tracks at once, refusing absolutely to concede secession or to negotiate with those who would not abandon independence and armed rebellion, while simultaneously offering a large degree of cultural and administrative autonomy to moderate, non-violent and non-secessionist Naga leaders. D. The North-East Frontier Agency was created in 1948 out of the border areas of Assam as a Union Territory outside the jurisdiction of Assam and placed under a special administration manned by a specially recruited cadre asked to implement development without disturbing the social and cultural pattern of life, and it was there that the Nehru-Elwin policy was implemented best; the objective of the Sixth Schedule was likewise to enable tribal people to live according to their own ways, with the Government of India willing to amend the provisions further to promote autonomy while refusing to countenance secession or violence.

Answer: A. Explanation: The tribes of north-eastern India, consisting of over a hundred groups speaking a wide variety of languages, differed from tribal communities elsewhere because they formed the overwhelming majority in the areas they inhabited, because British administration had given their areas a separate status inside Assam and excluded plains outsiders from acquiring land, and because they had almost no political or cultural contact with the national movement, so that the common bonds forged in the anti-imperialist struggle had little purchase there and some missionaries and other foreigners even promoted sentiment for separate states immediately after independence. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q46. Which chronology card should be filed under Why the North-East was a different problem?

A. A section of the Naga leadership opposed integration and rose in rebellion under A.Z. Phizo demanding complete independence, and in 1955 these separatists declared the formation of an independent government and launched a violent insurrection; the Government of India answered on two tracks at once, refusing absolutely to concede secession or to negotiate with those who would not abandon independence and armed rebellion, while simultaneously offering a large degree of cultural and administrative autonomy to moderate, non-violent and non-secessionist Naga leaders. B. The tribes of north-eastern India, consisting of over a hundred groups speaking a wide variety of languages, differed from tribal communities elsewhere because they formed the overwhelming majority in the areas they inhabited, because British administration had given their areas a separate status inside Assam and excluded plains outsiders from acquiring land, and because they had almost no political or cultural contact with the national movement, so that the common bonds forged in the anti-imperialist struggle had little purchase there and some missionaries and other foreigners even promoted sentiment for separate states immediately after independence. C. Resentment against the Assam government mounted among the hill tribes, who feared assimilation by what they saw as a policy of Assamization, and the demand for a separate hill state gained decisive strength when Assamese leaders moved in 1960 to make Assamese the sole official language of the state; the hill parties merged into the All Party Hill Leaders Conference in 1960, the Assam Official Language Act provoked hartals, demonstrations and a major agitation, the advocates of a separate state won overwhelmingly in the tribal areas in the 1962 elections and boycotted the Assembly, and in 1969 a constitutional amendment carved out Meghalaya as a state within a state with complete autonomy except for law and order. D. The army was sent to Nagaland in early 1956 to restore peace and order, the back of the armed rebellion was broken by the middle of 1957, moderate Naga leaders headed by Dr Imkongliba Ao then came to the fore and negotiated for a state within the Indian union, and through a series of intermediate steps the state of Nagaland came into existence in 1963, after which politics in Nagaland followed the pattern of other states of the union; the sequence is coercion followed by political accommodation, never coercion alone and never accommodation alone.

Answer: B. Explanation: The tribes of north-eastern India, consisting of over a hundred groups speaking a wide variety of languages, differed from tribal communities elsewhere because they formed the overwhelming majority in the areas they inhabited, because British administration had given their areas a separate status inside Assam and excluded plains outsiders from acquiring land, and because they had almost no political or cultural contact with the national movement, so that the common bonds forged in the anti-imperialist struggle had little purchase there and some missionaries and other foreigners even promoted sentiment for separate states immediately after independence. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q47. Which option should a candidate retain when revising Why the North-East was a different problem?

A. Resentment against the Assam government mounted among the hill tribes, who feared assimilation by what they saw as a policy of Assamization, and the demand for a separate hill state gained decisive strength when Assamese leaders moved in 1960 to make Assamese the sole official language of the state; the hill parties merged into the All Party Hill Leaders Conference in 1960, the Assam Official Language Act provoked hartals, demonstrations and a major agitation, the advocates of a separate state won overwhelmingly in the tribal areas in the 1962 elections and boycotted the Assembly, and in 1969 a constitutional amendment carved out Meghalaya as a state within a state with complete autonomy except for law and order. B. The army was sent to Nagaland in early 1956 to restore peace and order, the back of the armed rebellion was broken by the middle of 1957, moderate Naga leaders headed by Dr Imkongliba Ao then came to the fore and negotiated for a state within the Indian union, and through a series of intermediate steps the state of Nagaland came into existence in 1963, after which politics in Nagaland followed the pattern of other states of the union; the sequence is coercion followed by political accommodation, never coercion alone and never accommodation alone. C. The tribes of north-eastern India, consisting of over a hundred groups speaking a wide variety of languages, differed from tribal communities elsewhere because they formed the overwhelming majority in the areas they inhabited, because British administration had given their areas a separate status inside Assam and excluded plains outsiders from acquiring land, and because they had almost no political or cultural contact with the national movement, so that the common bonds forged in the anti-imperialist struggle had little purchase there and some missionaries and other foreigners even promoted sentiment for separate states immediately after independence. D. As part of the reorganisation of the North-East in 1972, Meghalaya became a separate state incorporating the Garo, Khasi and Jaintia tribes, the Union Territories of Manipur and Tripura were simultaneously granted statehood, and NEFA was renamed Arunachal Pradesh; the transition to statehood in the cases of Meghalaya, Manipur, Tripura and Arunachal Pradesh was on the owners' account quite smooth, and Arunachal Pradesh itself attained statehood in 1987.

Answer: C. Explanation: The tribes of north-eastern India, consisting of over a hundred groups speaking a wide variety of languages, differed from tribal communities elsewhere because they formed the overwhelming majority in the areas they inhabited, because British administration had given their areas a separate status inside Assam and excluded plains outsiders from acquiring land, and because they had almost no political or cultural contact with the national movement, so that the common bonds forged in the anti-imperialist struggle had little purchase there and some missionaries and other foreigners even promoted sentiment for separate states immediately after independence. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q48. Which statement avoids a common matching trap about Why the North-East was a different problem?

A. As part of the reorganisation of the North-East in 1972, Meghalaya became a separate state incorporating the Garo, Khasi and Jaintia tribes, the Union Territories of Manipur and Tripura were simultaneously granted statehood, and NEFA was renamed Arunachal Pradesh; the transition to statehood in the cases of Meghalaya, Manipur, Tripura and Arunachal Pradesh was on the owners' account quite smooth, and Arunachal Pradesh itself attained statehood in 1987. B. Unhappiness with the Assam government's relief measures during the famine of 1959 and the passage of the Act in 1961 making Assamese the official language of the state led to the formation of the Mizo National Front under Laldenga, which contested elections while building a military wing trained and armed from outside; in March 1966 the Front declared independence, proclaimed a military uprising and attacked military and civilian targets, the insurrection was crushed within a few weeks by massive counter-insurgency measures although stray guerrilla activity continued, and in 1973, after less extremist Mizo leaders had scaled the demand down to a separate state within the union, the Mizo district was separated from Assam and given the status of a Union Territory as Mizoram. A settlement was finally arrived at in 1986 under which Laldenga and the Front agreed to abandon underground violent activity, surrender with their arms and re-enter the constitutional political stream while the Government of India granted full statehood with guarantees for culture, tradition and land laws, and a government with Laldenga as chief minister was formed in the new state of Mizoram in February 1987; Mizoram is the model case of an insurgency ending with its leader as elected head of a new state, and it must be presented as the successful case rather than as the universal outcome, because not every North-Eastern conflict was settled on this model and no current security assessment belongs in a historical answer. C. Resentment against the Assam government mounted among the hill tribes, who feared assimilation by what they saw as a policy of Assamization, and the demand for a separate hill state gained decisive strength when Assamese leaders moved in 1960 to make Assamese the sole official language of the state; the hill parties merged into the All Party Hill Leaders Conference in 1960, the Assam Official Language Act provoked hartals, demonstrations and a major agitation, the advocates of a separate state won overwhelmingly in the tribal areas in the 1962 elections and boycotted the Assembly, and in 1969 a constitutional amendment carved out Meghalaya as a state within a state with complete autonomy except for law and order. D. The tribes of north-eastern India, consisting of over a hundred groups speaking a wide variety of languages, differed from tribal communities elsewhere because they formed the overwhelming majority in the areas they inhabited, because British administration had given their areas a separate status inside Assam and excluded plains outsiders from acquiring land, and because they had almost no political or cultural contact with the national movement, so that the common bonds forged in the anti-imperialist struggle had little purchase there and some missionaries and other foreigners even promoted sentiment for separate states immediately after independence.

Answer: D. Explanation: The tribes of north-eastern India, consisting of over a hundred groups speaking a wide variety of languages, differed from tribal communities elsewhere because they formed the overwhelming majority in the areas they inhabited, because British administration had given their areas a separate status inside Assam and excluded plains outsiders from acquiring land, and because they had almost no political or cultural contact with the national movement, so that the common bonds forged in the anti-imperialist struggle had little purchase there and some missionaries and other foreigners even promoted sentiment for separate states immediately after independence. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q49. Which statement correctly identifies NEFA from 1948 and the Sixth Schedule in practice?

A. The North-East Frontier Agency was created in 1948 out of the border areas of Assam as a Union Territory outside the jurisdiction of Assam and placed under a special administration manned by a specially recruited cadre asked to implement development without disturbing the social and cultural pattern of life, and it was there that the Nehru-Elwin policy was implemented best; the objective of the Sixth Schedule was likewise to enable tribal people to live according to their own ways, with the Government of India willing to amend the provisions further to promote autonomy while refusing to countenance secession or violence. B. The army was sent to Nagaland in early 1956 to restore peace and order, the back of the armed rebellion was broken by the middle of 1957, moderate Naga leaders headed by Dr Imkongliba Ao then came to the fore and negotiated for a state within the Indian union, and through a series of intermediate steps the state of Nagaland came into existence in 1963, after which politics in Nagaland followed the pattern of other states of the union; the sequence is coercion followed by political accommodation, never coercion alone and never accommodation alone. C. Resentment against the Assam government mounted among the hill tribes, who feared assimilation by what they saw as a policy of Assamization, and the demand for a separate hill state gained decisive strength when Assamese leaders moved in 1960 to make Assamese the sole official language of the state; the hill parties merged into the All Party Hill Leaders Conference in 1960, the Assam Official Language Act provoked hartals, demonstrations and a major agitation, the advocates of a separate state won overwhelmingly in the tribal areas in the 1962 elections and boycotted the Assembly, and in 1969 a constitutional amendment carved out Meghalaya as a state within a state with complete autonomy except for law and order. D. A section of the Naga leadership opposed integration and rose in rebellion under A.Z. Phizo demanding complete independence, and in 1955 these separatists declared the formation of an independent government and launched a violent insurrection; the Government of India answered on two tracks at once, refusing absolutely to concede secession or to negotiate with those who would not abandon independence and armed rebellion, while simultaneously offering a large degree of cultural and administrative autonomy to moderate, non-violent and non-secessionist Naga leaders.

Answer: A. Explanation: The North-East Frontier Agency was created in 1948 out of the border areas of Assam as a Union Territory outside the jurisdiction of Assam and placed under a special administration manned by a specially recruited cadre asked to implement development without disturbing the social and cultural pattern of life, and it was there that the Nehru-Elwin policy was implemented best; the objective of the Sixth Schedule was likewise to enable tribal people to live according to their own ways, with the Government of India willing to amend the provisions further to promote autonomy while refusing to countenance secession or violence. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q50. Which chronology card should be filed under NEFA from 1948 and the Sixth Schedule in practice?

A. The army was sent to Nagaland in early 1956 to restore peace and order, the back of the armed rebellion was broken by the middle of 1957, moderate Naga leaders headed by Dr Imkongliba Ao then came to the fore and negotiated for a state within the Indian union, and through a series of intermediate steps the state of Nagaland came into existence in 1963, after which politics in Nagaland followed the pattern of other states of the union; the sequence is coercion followed by political accommodation, never coercion alone and never accommodation alone. B. The North-East Frontier Agency was created in 1948 out of the border areas of Assam as a Union Territory outside the jurisdiction of Assam and placed under a special administration manned by a specially recruited cadre asked to implement development without disturbing the social and cultural pattern of life, and it was there that the Nehru-Elwin policy was implemented best; the objective of the Sixth Schedule was likewise to enable tribal people to live according to their own ways, with the Government of India willing to amend the provisions further to promote autonomy while refusing to countenance secession or violence. C. As part of the reorganisation of the North-East in 1972, Meghalaya became a separate state incorporating the Garo, Khasi and Jaintia tribes, the Union Territories of Manipur and Tripura were simultaneously granted statehood, and NEFA was renamed Arunachal Pradesh; the transition to statehood in the cases of Meghalaya, Manipur, Tripura and Arunachal Pradesh was on the owners' account quite smooth, and Arunachal Pradesh itself attained statehood in 1987. D. Resentment against the Assam government mounted among the hill tribes, who feared assimilation by what they saw as a policy of Assamization, and the demand for a separate hill state gained decisive strength when Assamese leaders moved in 1960 to make Assamese the sole official language of the state; the hill parties merged into the All Party Hill Leaders Conference in 1960, the Assam Official Language Act provoked hartals, demonstrations and a major agitation, the advocates of a separate state won overwhelmingly in the tribal areas in the 1962 elections and boycotted the Assembly, and in 1969 a constitutional amendment carved out Meghalaya as a state within a state with complete autonomy except for law and order.

Answer: B. Explanation: The North-East Frontier Agency was created in 1948 out of the border areas of Assam as a Union Territory outside the jurisdiction of Assam and placed under a special administration manned by a specially recruited cadre asked to implement development without disturbing the social and cultural pattern of life, and it was there that the Nehru-Elwin policy was implemented best; the objective of the Sixth Schedule was likewise to enable tribal people to live according to their own ways, with the Government of India willing to amend the provisions further to promote autonomy while refusing to countenance secession or violence. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q51. Which option should a candidate retain when revising NEFA from 1948 and the Sixth Schedule in practice?

A. As part of the reorganisation of the North-East in 1972, Meghalaya became a separate state incorporating the Garo, Khasi and Jaintia tribes, the Union Territories of Manipur and Tripura were simultaneously granted statehood, and NEFA was renamed Arunachal Pradesh; the transition to statehood in the cases of Meghalaya, Manipur, Tripura and Arunachal Pradesh was on the owners' account quite smooth, and Arunachal Pradesh itself attained statehood in 1987. B. Unhappiness with the Assam government's relief measures during the famine of 1959 and the passage of the Act in 1961 making Assamese the official language of the state led to the formation of the Mizo National Front under Laldenga, which contested elections while building a military wing trained and armed from outside; in March 1966 the Front declared independence, proclaimed a military uprising and attacked military and civilian targets, the insurrection was crushed within a few weeks by massive counter-insurgency measures although stray guerrilla activity continued, and in 1973, after less extremist Mizo leaders had scaled the demand down to a separate state within the union, the Mizo district was separated from Assam and given the status of a Union Territory as Mizoram. A settlement was finally arrived at in 1986 under which Laldenga and the Front agreed to abandon underground violent activity, surrender with their arms and re-enter the constitutional political stream while the Government of India granted full statehood with guarantees for culture, tradition and land laws, and a government with Laldenga as chief minister was formed in the new state of Mizoram in February 1987; Mizoram is the model case of an insurgency ending with its leader as elected head of a new state, and it must be presented as the successful case rather than as the universal outcome, because not every North-Eastern conflict was settled on this model and no current security assessment belongs in a historical answer. C. The North-East Frontier Agency was created in 1948 out of the border areas of Assam as a Union Territory outside the jurisdiction of Assam and placed under a special administration manned by a specially recruited cadre asked to implement development without disturbing the social and cultural pattern of life, and it was there that the Nehru-Elwin policy was implemented best; the objective of the Sixth Schedule was likewise to enable tribal people to live according to their own ways, with the Government of India willing to amend the provisions further to promote autonomy while refusing to countenance secession or violence. D. Resentment against the Assam government mounted among the hill tribes, who feared assimilation by what they saw as a policy of Assamization, and the demand for a separate hill state gained decisive strength when Assamese leaders moved in 1960 to make Assamese the sole official language of the state; the hill parties merged into the All Party Hill Leaders Conference in 1960, the Assam Official Language Act provoked hartals, demonstrations and a major agitation, the advocates of a separate state won overwhelmingly in the tribal areas in the 1962 elections and boycotted the Assembly, and in 1969 a constitutional amendment carved out Meghalaya as a state within a state with complete autonomy except for law and order.

Answer: C. Explanation: The North-East Frontier Agency was created in 1948 out of the border areas of Assam as a Union Territory outside the jurisdiction of Assam and placed under a special administration manned by a specially recruited cadre asked to implement development without disturbing the social and cultural pattern of life, and it was there that the Nehru-Elwin policy was implemented best; the objective of the Sixth Schedule was likewise to enable tribal people to live according to their own ways, with the Government of India willing to amend the provisions further to promote autonomy while refusing to countenance secession or violence. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q52. Which statement avoids a common matching trap about NEFA from 1948 and the Sixth Schedule in practice?

A. Unhappiness with the Assam government's relief measures during the famine of 1959 and the passage of the Act in 1961 making Assamese the official language of the state led to the formation of the Mizo National Front under Laldenga, which contested elections while building a military wing trained and armed from outside; in March 1966 the Front declared independence, proclaimed a military uprising and attacked military and civilian targets, the insurrection was crushed within a few weeks by massive counter-insurgency measures although stray guerrilla activity continued, and in 1973, after less extremist Mizo leaders had scaled the demand down to a separate state within the union, the Mizo district was separated from Assam and given the status of a Union Territory as Mizoram. A settlement was finally arrived at in 1986 under which Laldenga and the Front agreed to abandon underground violent activity, surrender with their arms and re-enter the constitutional political stream while the Government of India granted full statehood with guarantees for culture, tradition and land laws, and a government with Laldenga as chief minister was formed in the new state of Mizoram in February 1987; Mizoram is the model case of an insurgency ending with its leader as elected head of a new state, and it must be presented as the successful case rather than as the universal outcome, because not every North-Eastern conflict was settled on this model and no current security assessment belongs in a historical answer. B. As part of the reorganisation of the North-East in 1972, Meghalaya became a separate state incorporating the Garo, Khasi and Jaintia tribes, the Union Territories of Manipur and Tripura were simultaneously granted statehood, and NEFA was renamed Arunachal Pradesh; the transition to statehood in the cases of Meghalaya, Manipur, Tripura and Arunachal Pradesh was on the owners' account quite smooth, and Arunachal Pradesh itself attained statehood in 1987. C. The Jharkhand Party was founded in 1950 under the leadership of the Oxford-educated Jaipal Singh to demand a separate tribal state incorporating Chota Nagpur and the Santhal Parganas of south Bihar together with contiguous tribal areas of Madhya Pradesh, Orissa and West Bengal; it won 32 seats in the 1952 elections and emerged as the main opposition party in the Bihar Assembly, then fell to 25 seats in 1957 and 20 seats in 1962, and the States Reorganization Commission of 1955 rejected the demand on the ground that the region did not have a common language while the central government held that tribals being a minority there could not claim a state of their own. D. The North-East Frontier Agency was created in 1948 out of the border areas of Assam as a Union Territory outside the jurisdiction of Assam and placed under a special administration manned by a specially recruited cadre asked to implement development without disturbing the social and cultural pattern of life, and it was there that the Nehru-Elwin policy was implemented best; the objective of the Sixth Schedule was likewise to enable tribal people to live according to their own ways, with the Government of India willing to amend the provisions further to promote autonomy while refusing to countenance secession or violence.

Answer: D. Explanation: The North-East Frontier Agency was created in 1948 out of the border areas of Assam as a Union Territory outside the jurisdiction of Assam and placed under a special administration manned by a specially recruited cadre asked to implement development without disturbing the social and cultural pattern of life, and it was there that the Nehru-Elwin policy was implemented best; the objective of the Sixth Schedule was likewise to enable tribal people to live according to their own ways, with the Government of India willing to amend the provisions further to promote autonomy while refusing to countenance secession or violence. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q53. Which statement correctly identifies The Naga declaration of 1955 and the two-track response?

A. A section of the Naga leadership opposed integration and rose in rebellion under A.Z. Phizo demanding complete independence, and in 1955 these separatists declared the formation of an independent government and launched a violent insurrection; the Government of India answered on two tracks at once, refusing absolutely to concede secession or to negotiate with those who would not abandon independence and armed rebellion, while simultaneously offering a large degree of cultural and administrative autonomy to moderate, non-violent and non-secessionist Naga leaders. B. The army was sent to Nagaland in early 1956 to restore peace and order, the back of the armed rebellion was broken by the middle of 1957, moderate Naga leaders headed by Dr Imkongliba Ao then came to the fore and negotiated for a state within the Indian union, and through a series of intermediate steps the state of Nagaland came into existence in 1963, after which politics in Nagaland followed the pattern of other states of the union; the sequence is coercion followed by political accommodation, never coercion alone and never accommodation alone. C. Resentment against the Assam government mounted among the hill tribes, who feared assimilation by what they saw as a policy of Assamization, and the demand for a separate hill state gained decisive strength when Assamese leaders moved in 1960 to make Assamese the sole official language of the state; the hill parties merged into the All Party Hill Leaders Conference in 1960, the Assam Official Language Act provoked hartals, demonstrations and a major agitation, the advocates of a separate state won overwhelmingly in the tribal areas in the 1962 elections and boycotted the Assembly, and in 1969 a constitutional amendment carved out Meghalaya as a state within a state with complete autonomy except for law and order. D. As part of the reorganisation of the North-East in 1972, Meghalaya became a separate state incorporating the Garo, Khasi and Jaintia tribes, the Union Territories of Manipur and Tripura were simultaneously granted statehood, and NEFA was renamed Arunachal Pradesh; the transition to statehood in the cases of Meghalaya, Manipur, Tripura and Arunachal Pradesh was on the owners' account quite smooth, and Arunachal Pradesh itself attained statehood in 1987.

Answer: A. Explanation: A section of the Naga leadership opposed integration and rose in rebellion under A.Z. Phizo demanding complete independence, and in 1955 these separatists declared the formation of an independent government and launched a violent insurrection; the Government of India answered on two tracks at once, refusing absolutely to concede secession or to negotiate with those who would not abandon independence and armed rebellion, while simultaneously offering a large degree of cultural and administrative autonomy to moderate, non-violent and non-secessionist Naga leaders. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q54. Which chronology card should be filed under The Naga declaration of 1955 and the two-track response?

A. As part of the reorganisation of the North-East in 1972, Meghalaya became a separate state incorporating the Garo, Khasi and Jaintia tribes, the Union Territories of Manipur and Tripura were simultaneously granted statehood, and NEFA was renamed Arunachal Pradesh; the transition to statehood in the cases of Meghalaya, Manipur, Tripura and Arunachal Pradesh was on the owners' account quite smooth, and Arunachal Pradesh itself attained statehood in 1987. B. A section of the Naga leadership opposed integration and rose in rebellion under A.Z. Phizo demanding complete independence, and in 1955 these separatists declared the formation of an independent government and launched a violent insurrection; the Government of India answered on two tracks at once, refusing absolutely to concede secession or to negotiate with those who would not abandon independence and armed rebellion, while simultaneously offering a large degree of cultural and administrative autonomy to moderate, non-violent and non-secessionist Naga leaders. C. Resentment against the Assam government mounted among the hill tribes, who feared assimilation by what they saw as a policy of Assamization, and the demand for a separate hill state gained decisive strength when Assamese leaders moved in 1960 to make Assamese the sole official language of the state; the hill parties merged into the All Party Hill Leaders Conference in 1960, the Assam Official Language Act provoked hartals, demonstrations and a major agitation, the advocates of a separate state won overwhelmingly in the tribal areas in the 1962 elections and boycotted the Assembly, and in 1969 a constitutional amendment carved out Meghalaya as a state within a state with complete autonomy except for law and order. D. Unhappiness with the Assam government's relief measures during the famine of 1959 and the passage of the Act in 1961 making Assamese the official language of the state led to the formation of the Mizo National Front under Laldenga, which contested elections while building a military wing trained and armed from outside; in March 1966 the Front declared independence, proclaimed a military uprising and attacked military and civilian targets, the insurrection was crushed within a few weeks by massive counter-insurgency measures although stray guerrilla activity continued, and in 1973, after less extremist Mizo leaders had scaled the demand down to a separate state within the union, the Mizo district was separated from Assam and given the status of a Union Territory as Mizoram. A settlement was finally arrived at in 1986 under which Laldenga and the Front agreed to abandon underground violent activity, surrender with their arms and re-enter the constitutional political stream while the Government of India granted full statehood with guarantees for culture, tradition and land laws, and a government with Laldenga as chief minister was formed in the new state of Mizoram in February 1987; Mizoram is the model case of an insurgency ending with its leader as elected head of a new state, and it must be presented as the successful case rather than as the universal outcome, because not every North-Eastern conflict was settled on this model and no current security assessment belongs in a historical answer.

Answer: B. Explanation: A section of the Naga leadership opposed integration and rose in rebellion under A.Z. Phizo demanding complete independence, and in 1955 these separatists declared the formation of an independent government and launched a violent insurrection; the Government of India answered on two tracks at once, refusing absolutely to concede secession or to negotiate with those who would not abandon independence and armed rebellion, while simultaneously offering a large degree of cultural and administrative autonomy to moderate, non-violent and non-secessionist Naga leaders. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q55. Which option should a candidate retain when revising The Naga declaration of 1955 and the two-track response?

A. As part of the reorganisation of the North-East in 1972, Meghalaya became a separate state incorporating the Garo, Khasi and Jaintia tribes, the Union Territories of Manipur and Tripura were simultaneously granted statehood, and NEFA was renamed Arunachal Pradesh; the transition to statehood in the cases of Meghalaya, Manipur, Tripura and Arunachal Pradesh was on the owners' account quite smooth, and Arunachal Pradesh itself attained statehood in 1987. B. The Jharkhand Party was founded in 1950 under the leadership of the Oxford-educated Jaipal Singh to demand a separate tribal state incorporating Chota Nagpur and the Santhal Parganas of south Bihar together with contiguous tribal areas of Madhya Pradesh, Orissa and West Bengal; it won 32 seats in the 1952 elections and emerged as the main opposition party in the Bihar Assembly, then fell to 25 seats in 1957 and 20 seats in 1962, and the States Reorganization Commission of 1955 rejected the demand on the ground that the region did not have a common language while the central government held that tribals being a minority there could not claim a state of their own. C. A section of the Naga leadership opposed integration and rose in rebellion under A.Z. Phizo demanding complete independence, and in 1955 these separatists declared the formation of an independent government and launched a violent insurrection; the Government of India answered on two tracks at once, refusing absolutely to concede secession or to negotiate with those who would not abandon independence and armed rebellion, while simultaneously offering a large degree of cultural and administrative autonomy to moderate, non-violent and non-secessionist Naga leaders. D. Unhappiness with the Assam government's relief measures during the famine of 1959 and the passage of the Act in 1961 making Assamese the official language of the state led to the formation of the Mizo National Front under Laldenga, which contested elections while building a military wing trained and armed from outside; in March 1966 the Front declared independence, proclaimed a military uprising and attacked military and civilian targets, the insurrection was crushed within a few weeks by massive counter-insurgency measures although stray guerrilla activity continued, and in 1973, after less extremist Mizo leaders had scaled the demand down to a separate state within the union, the Mizo district was separated from Assam and given the status of a Union Territory as Mizoram. A settlement was finally arrived at in 1986 under which Laldenga and the Front agreed to abandon underground violent activity, surrender with their arms and re-enter the constitutional political stream while the Government of India granted full statehood with guarantees for culture, tradition and land laws, and a government with Laldenga as chief minister was formed in the new state of Mizoram in February 1987; Mizoram is the model case of an insurgency ending with its leader as elected head of a new state, and it must be presented as the successful case rather than as the universal outcome, because not every North-Eastern conflict was settled on this model and no current security assessment belongs in a historical answer.

Answer: C. Explanation: A section of the Naga leadership opposed integration and rose in rebellion under A.Z. Phizo demanding complete independence, and in 1955 these separatists declared the formation of an independent government and launched a violent insurrection; the Government of India answered on two tracks at once, refusing absolutely to concede secession or to negotiate with those who would not abandon independence and armed rebellion, while simultaneously offering a large degree of cultural and administrative autonomy to moderate, non-violent and non-secessionist Naga leaders. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q56. Which statement avoids a common matching trap about The Naga declaration of 1955 and the two-track response?

A. Scheduled Tribes formed 31.15 per cent of the population of Chota Nagpur and 44.67 per cent of the Santhal Parganas in 1951 and 30.94 and 36.22 per cent respectively in 1971, so that nearly two-thirds of Jharkhand's population in 1971 was non-tribal; the Jharkhand Party had already tried to give its demand a regional character by opening membership to non-tribals, Jaipal Singh and much of the leadership joined the Congress in 1963, and the Jharkhand Mukti Morcha formed in late 1972 with Shibu Soren emerging as its leader recast the demand as a regional one on behalf of the peasants and workers of the region, although the movement never shifted completely from tribal to class-based regional politics because it was built around tribal identity and tribal demands. B. The Jharkhand Party was founded in 1950 under the leadership of the Oxford-educated Jaipal Singh to demand a separate tribal state incorporating Chota Nagpur and the Santhal Parganas of south Bihar together with contiguous tribal areas of Madhya Pradesh, Orissa and West Bengal; it won 32 seats in the 1952 elections and emerged as the main opposition party in the Bihar Assembly, then fell to 25 seats in 1957 and 20 seats in 1962, and the States Reorganization Commission of 1955 rejected the demand on the ground that the region did not have a common language while the central government held that tribals being a minority there could not claim a state of their own. C. Unhappiness with the Assam government's relief measures during the famine of 1959 and the passage of the Act in 1961 making Assamese the official language of the state led to the formation of the Mizo National Front under Laldenga, which contested elections while building a military wing trained and armed from outside; in March 1966 the Front declared independence, proclaimed a military uprising and attacked military and civilian targets, the insurrection was crushed within a few weeks by massive counter-insurgency measures although stray guerrilla activity continued, and in 1973, after less extremist Mizo leaders had scaled the demand down to a separate state within the union, the Mizo district was separated from Assam and given the status of a Union Territory as Mizoram. A settlement was finally arrived at in 1986 under which Laldenga and the Front agreed to abandon underground violent activity, surrender with their arms and re-enter the constitutional political stream while the Government of India granted full statehood with guarantees for culture, tradition and land laws, and a government with Laldenga as chief minister was formed in the new state of Mizoram in February 1987; Mizoram is the model case of an insurgency ending with its leader as elected head of a new state, and it must be presented as the successful case rather than as the universal outcome, because not every North-Eastern conflict was settled on this model and no current security assessment belongs in a historical answer. D. A section of the Naga leadership opposed integration and rose in rebellion under A.Z. Phizo demanding complete independence, and in 1955 these separatists declared the formation of an independent government and launched a violent insurrection; the Government of India answered on two tracks at once, refusing absolutely to concede secession or to negotiate with those who would not abandon independence and armed rebellion, while simultaneously offering a large degree of cultural and administrative autonomy to moderate, non-violent and non-secessionist Naga leaders.

Answer: D. Explanation: A section of the Naga leadership opposed integration and rose in rebellion under A.Z. Phizo demanding complete independence, and in 1955 these separatists declared the formation of an independent government and launched a violent insurrection; the Government of India answered on two tracks at once, refusing absolutely to concede secession or to negotiate with those who would not abandon independence and armed rebellion, while simultaneously offering a large degree of cultural and administrative autonomy to moderate, non-violent and non-secessionist Naga leaders. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q57. Which statement correctly identifies From the army in early 1956 to Nagaland in 1963?

A. The army was sent to Nagaland in early 1956 to restore peace and order, the back of the armed rebellion was broken by the middle of 1957, moderate Naga leaders headed by Dr Imkongliba Ao then came to the fore and negotiated for a state within the Indian union, and through a series of intermediate steps the state of Nagaland came into existence in 1963, after which politics in Nagaland followed the pattern of other states of the union; the sequence is coercion followed by political accommodation, never coercion alone and never accommodation alone. B. Resentment against the Assam government mounted among the hill tribes, who feared assimilation by what they saw as a policy of Assamization, and the demand for a separate hill state gained decisive strength when Assamese leaders moved in 1960 to make Assamese the sole official language of the state; the hill parties merged into the All Party Hill Leaders Conference in 1960, the Assam Official Language Act provoked hartals, demonstrations and a major agitation, the advocates of a separate state won overwhelmingly in the tribal areas in the 1962 elections and boycotted the Assembly, and in 1969 a constitutional amendment carved out Meghalaya as a state within a state with complete autonomy except for law and order. C. As part of the reorganisation of the North-East in 1972, Meghalaya became a separate state incorporating the Garo, Khasi and Jaintia tribes, the Union Territories of Manipur and Tripura were simultaneously granted statehood, and NEFA was renamed Arunachal Pradesh; the transition to statehood in the cases of Meghalaya, Manipur, Tripura and Arunachal Pradesh was on the owners' account quite smooth, and Arunachal Pradesh itself attained statehood in 1987. D. Unhappiness with the Assam government's relief measures during the famine of 1959 and the passage of the Act in 1961 making Assamese the official language of the state led to the formation of the Mizo National Front under Laldenga, which contested elections while building a military wing trained and armed from outside; in March 1966 the Front declared independence, proclaimed a military uprising and attacked military and civilian targets, the insurrection was crushed within a few weeks by massive counter-insurgency measures although stray guerrilla activity continued, and in 1973, after less extremist Mizo leaders had scaled the demand down to a separate state within the union, the Mizo district was separated from Assam and given the status of a Union Territory as Mizoram. A settlement was finally arrived at in 1986 under which Laldenga and the Front agreed to abandon underground violent activity, surrender with their arms and re-enter the constitutional political stream while the Government of India granted full statehood with guarantees for culture, tradition and land laws, and a government with Laldenga as chief minister was formed in the new state of Mizoram in February 1987; Mizoram is the model case of an insurgency ending with its leader as elected head of a new state, and it must be presented as the successful case rather than as the universal outcome, because not every North-Eastern conflict was settled on this model and no current security assessment belongs in a historical answer.

Answer: A. Explanation: The army was sent to Nagaland in early 1956 to restore peace and order, the back of the armed rebellion was broken by the middle of 1957, moderate Naga leaders headed by Dr Imkongliba Ao then came to the fore and negotiated for a state within the Indian union, and through a series of intermediate steps the state of Nagaland came into existence in 1963, after which politics in Nagaland followed the pattern of other states of the union; the sequence is coercion followed by political accommodation, never coercion alone and never accommodation alone. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q58. Which chronology card should be filed under From the army in early 1956 to Nagaland in 1963?

A. The Jharkhand Party was founded in 1950 under the leadership of the Oxford-educated Jaipal Singh to demand a separate tribal state incorporating Chota Nagpur and the Santhal Parganas of south Bihar together with contiguous tribal areas of Madhya Pradesh, Orissa and West Bengal; it won 32 seats in the 1952 elections and emerged as the main opposition party in the Bihar Assembly, then fell to 25 seats in 1957 and 20 seats in 1962, and the States Reorganization Commission of 1955 rejected the demand on the ground that the region did not have a common language while the central government held that tribals being a minority there could not claim a state of their own. B. The army was sent to Nagaland in early 1956 to restore peace and order, the back of the armed rebellion was broken by the middle of 1957, moderate Naga leaders headed by Dr Imkongliba Ao then came to the fore and negotiated for a state within the Indian union, and through a series of intermediate steps the state of Nagaland came into existence in 1963, after which politics in Nagaland followed the pattern of other states of the union; the sequence is coercion followed by political accommodation, never coercion alone and never accommodation alone. C. Unhappiness with the Assam government's relief measures during the famine of 1959 and the passage of the Act in 1961 making Assamese the official language of the state led to the formation of the Mizo National Front under Laldenga, which contested elections while building a military wing trained and armed from outside; in March 1966 the Front declared independence, proclaimed a military uprising and attacked military and civilian targets, the insurrection was crushed within a few weeks by massive counter-insurgency measures although stray guerrilla activity continued, and in 1973, after less extremist Mizo leaders had scaled the demand down to a separate state within the union, the Mizo district was separated from Assam and given the status of a Union Territory as Mizoram. A settlement was finally arrived at in 1986 under which Laldenga and the Front agreed to abandon underground violent activity, surrender with their arms and re-enter the constitutional political stream while the Government of India granted full statehood with guarantees for culture, tradition and land laws, and a government with Laldenga as chief minister was formed in the new state of Mizoram in February 1987; Mizoram is the model case of an insurgency ending with its leader as elected head of a new state, and it must be presented as the successful case rather than as the universal outcome, because not every North-Eastern conflict was settled on this model and no current security assessment belongs in a historical answer. D. As part of the reorganisation of the North-East in 1972, Meghalaya became a separate state incorporating the Garo, Khasi and Jaintia tribes, the Union Territories of Manipur and Tripura were simultaneously granted statehood, and NEFA was renamed Arunachal Pradesh; the transition to statehood in the cases of Meghalaya, Manipur, Tripura and Arunachal Pradesh was on the owners' account quite smooth, and Arunachal Pradesh itself attained statehood in 1987.

Answer: B. Explanation: The army was sent to Nagaland in early 1956 to restore peace and order, the back of the armed rebellion was broken by the middle of 1957, moderate Naga leaders headed by Dr Imkongliba Ao then came to the fore and negotiated for a state within the Indian union, and through a series of intermediate steps the state of Nagaland came into existence in 1963, after which politics in Nagaland followed the pattern of other states of the union; the sequence is coercion followed by political accommodation, never coercion alone and never accommodation alone. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q59. Which option should a candidate retain when revising From the army in early 1956 to Nagaland in 1963?

A. Scheduled Tribes formed 31.15 per cent of the population of Chota Nagpur and 44.67 per cent of the Santhal Parganas in 1951 and 30.94 and 36.22 per cent respectively in 1971, so that nearly two-thirds of Jharkhand's population in 1971 was non-tribal; the Jharkhand Party had already tried to give its demand a regional character by opening membership to non-tribals, Jaipal Singh and much of the leadership joined the Congress in 1963, and the Jharkhand Mukti Morcha formed in late 1972 with Shibu Soren emerging as its leader recast the demand as a regional one on behalf of the peasants and workers of the region, although the movement never shifted completely from tribal to class-based regional politics because it was built around tribal identity and tribal demands. B. The Jharkhand Party was founded in 1950 under the leadership of the Oxford-educated Jaipal Singh to demand a separate tribal state incorporating Chota Nagpur and the Santhal Parganas of south Bihar together with contiguous tribal areas of Madhya Pradesh, Orissa and West Bengal; it won 32 seats in the 1952 elections and emerged as the main opposition party in the Bihar Assembly, then fell to 25 seats in 1957 and 20 seats in 1962, and the States Reorganization Commission of 1955 rejected the demand on the ground that the region did not have a common language while the central government held that tribals being a minority there could not claim a state of their own. C. The army was sent to Nagaland in early 1956 to restore peace and order, the back of the armed rebellion was broken by the middle of 1957, moderate Naga leaders headed by Dr Imkongliba Ao then came to the fore and negotiated for a state within the Indian union, and through a series of intermediate steps the state of Nagaland came into existence in 1963, after which politics in Nagaland followed the pattern of other states of the union; the sequence is coercion followed by political accommodation, never coercion alone and never accommodation alone. D. Unhappiness with the Assam government's relief measures during the famine of 1959 and the passage of the Act in 1961 making Assamese the official language of the state led to the formation of the Mizo National Front under Laldenga, which contested elections while building a military wing trained and armed from outside; in March 1966 the Front declared independence, proclaimed a military uprising and attacked military and civilian targets, the insurrection was crushed within a few weeks by massive counter-insurgency measures although stray guerrilla activity continued, and in 1973, after less extremist Mizo leaders had scaled the demand down to a separate state within the union, the Mizo district was separated from Assam and given the status of a Union Territory as Mizoram. A settlement was finally arrived at in 1986 under which Laldenga and the Front agreed to abandon underground violent activity, surrender with their arms and re-enter the constitutional political stream while the Government of India granted full statehood with guarantees for culture, tradition and land laws, and a government with Laldenga as chief minister was formed in the new state of Mizoram in February 1987; Mizoram is the model case of an insurgency ending with its leader as elected head of a new state, and it must be presented as the successful case rather than as the universal outcome, because not every North-Eastern conflict was settled on this model and no current security assessment belongs in a historical answer.

Answer: C. Explanation: The army was sent to Nagaland in early 1956 to restore peace and order, the back of the armed rebellion was broken by the middle of 1957, moderate Naga leaders headed by Dr Imkongliba Ao then came to the fore and negotiated for a state within the Indian union, and through a series of intermediate steps the state of Nagaland came into existence in 1963, after which politics in Nagaland followed the pattern of other states of the union; the sequence is coercion followed by political accommodation, never coercion alone and never accommodation alone. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q60. Which statement avoids a common matching trap about From the army in early 1956 to Nagaland in 1963?

A. Scheduled Tribes formed 31.15 per cent of the population of Chota Nagpur and 44.67 per cent of the Santhal Parganas in 1951 and 30.94 and 36.22 per cent respectively in 1971, so that nearly two-thirds of Jharkhand's population in 1971 was non-tribal; the Jharkhand Party had already tried to give its demand a regional character by opening membership to non-tribals, Jaipal Singh and much of the leadership joined the Congress in 1963, and the Jharkhand Mukti Morcha formed in late 1972 with Shibu Soren emerging as its leader recast the demand as a regional one on behalf of the peasants and workers of the region, although the movement never shifted completely from tribal to class-based regional politics because it was built around tribal identity and tribal demands. B. The 1971 Census recorded over 400 tribal communities numbering nearly 38 million people and constituting nearly 6.9 per cent of the Indian population, with the greatest concentrations in Madhya Pradesh, Bihar, Orissa, north-eastern India, West Bengal, Maharashtra, Gujarat and Rajasthan; these figures must always carry the 1971 Census attribution and must never be presented as 1951 figures or as current data, and no contemporary tribal statistic may be substituted for them. C. The Jharkhand Party was founded in 1950 under the leadership of the Oxford-educated Jaipal Singh to demand a separate tribal state incorporating Chota Nagpur and the Santhal Parganas of south Bihar together with contiguous tribal areas of Madhya Pradesh, Orissa and West Bengal; it won 32 seats in the 1952 elections and emerged as the main opposition party in the Bihar Assembly, then fell to 25 seats in 1957 and 20 seats in 1962, and the States Reorganization Commission of 1955 rejected the demand on the ground that the region did not have a common language while the central government held that tribals being a minority there could not claim a state of their own. D. The army was sent to Nagaland in early 1956 to restore peace and order, the back of the armed rebellion was broken by the middle of 1957, moderate Naga leaders headed by Dr Imkongliba Ao then came to the fore and negotiated for a state within the Indian union, and through a series of intermediate steps the state of Nagaland came into existence in 1963, after which politics in Nagaland followed the pattern of other states of the union; the sequence is coercion followed by political accommodation, never coercion alone and never accommodation alone.

Answer: D. Explanation: The army was sent to Nagaland in early 1956 to restore peace and order, the back of the armed rebellion was broken by the middle of 1957, moderate Naga leaders headed by Dr Imkongliba Ao then came to the fore and negotiated for a state within the Indian union, and through a series of intermediate steps the state of Nagaland came into existence in 1963, after which politics in Nagaland followed the pattern of other states of the union; the sequence is coercion followed by political accommodation, never coercion alone and never accommodation alone. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q61. Which statement correctly identifies The hill-state demand, the language trigger and Meghalaya in 1969?

A. Resentment against the Assam government mounted among the hill tribes, who feared assimilation by what they saw as a policy of Assamization, and the demand for a separate hill state gained decisive strength when Assamese leaders moved in 1960 to make Assamese the sole official language of the state; the hill parties merged into the All Party Hill Leaders Conference in 1960, the Assam Official Language Act provoked hartals, demonstrations and a major agitation, the advocates of a separate state won overwhelmingly in the tribal areas in the 1962 elections and boycotted the Assembly, and in 1969 a constitutional amendment carved out Meghalaya as a state within a state with complete autonomy except for law and order. B. The Jharkhand Party was founded in 1950 under the leadership of the Oxford-educated Jaipal Singh to demand a separate tribal state incorporating Chota Nagpur and the Santhal Parganas of south Bihar together with contiguous tribal areas of Madhya Pradesh, Orissa and West Bengal; it won 32 seats in the 1952 elections and emerged as the main opposition party in the Bihar Assembly, then fell to 25 seats in 1957 and 20 seats in 1962, and the States Reorganization Commission of 1955 rejected the demand on the ground that the region did not have a common language while the central government held that tribals being a minority there could not claim a state of their own. C. Unhappiness with the Assam government's relief measures during the famine of 1959 and the passage of the Act in 1961 making Assamese the official language of the state led to the formation of the Mizo National Front under Laldenga, which contested elections while building a military wing trained and armed from outside; in March 1966 the Front declared independence, proclaimed a military uprising and attacked military and civilian targets, the insurrection was crushed within a few weeks by massive counter-insurgency measures although stray guerrilla activity continued, and in 1973, after less extremist Mizo leaders had scaled the demand down to a separate state within the union, the Mizo district was separated from Assam and given the status of a Union Territory as Mizoram. A settlement was finally arrived at in 1986 under which Laldenga and the Front agreed to abandon underground violent activity, surrender with their arms and re-enter the constitutional political stream while the Government of India granted full statehood with guarantees for culture, tradition and land laws, and a government with Laldenga as chief minister was formed in the new state of Mizoram in February 1987; Mizoram is the model case of an insurgency ending with its leader as elected head of a new state, and it must be presented as the successful case rather than as the universal outcome, because not every North-Eastern conflict was settled on this model and no current security assessment belongs in a historical answer. D. As part of the reorganisation of the North-East in 1972, Meghalaya became a separate state incorporating the Garo, Khasi and Jaintia tribes, the Union Territories of Manipur and Tripura were simultaneously granted statehood, and NEFA was renamed Arunachal Pradesh; the transition to statehood in the cases of Meghalaya, Manipur, Tripura and Arunachal Pradesh was on the owners' account quite smooth, and Arunachal Pradesh itself attained statehood in 1987.

Answer: A. Explanation: Resentment against the Assam government mounted among the hill tribes, who feared assimilation by what they saw as a policy of Assamization, and the demand for a separate hill state gained decisive strength when Assamese leaders moved in 1960 to make Assamese the sole official language of the state; the hill parties merged into the All Party Hill Leaders Conference in 1960, the Assam Official Language Act provoked hartals, demonstrations and a major agitation, the advocates of a separate state won overwhelmingly in the tribal areas in the 1962 elections and boycotted the Assembly, and in 1969 a constitutional amendment carved out Meghalaya as a state within a state with complete autonomy except for law and order. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q62. Which chronology card should be filed under The hill-state demand, the language trigger and Meghalaya in 1969?

A. Unhappiness with the Assam government's relief measures during the famine of 1959 and the passage of the Act in 1961 making Assamese the official language of the state led to the formation of the Mizo National Front under Laldenga, which contested elections while building a military wing trained and armed from outside; in March 1966 the Front declared independence, proclaimed a military uprising and attacked military and civilian targets, the insurrection was crushed within a few weeks by massive counter-insurgency measures although stray guerrilla activity continued, and in 1973, after less extremist Mizo leaders had scaled the demand down to a separate state within the union, the Mizo district was separated from Assam and given the status of a Union Territory as Mizoram. A settlement was finally arrived at in 1986 under which Laldenga and the Front agreed to abandon underground violent activity, surrender with their arms and re-enter the constitutional political stream while the Government of India granted full statehood with guarantees for culture, tradition and land laws, and a government with Laldenga as chief minister was formed in the new state of Mizoram in February 1987; Mizoram is the model case of an insurgency ending with its leader as elected head of a new state, and it must be presented as the successful case rather than as the universal outcome, because not every North-Eastern conflict was settled on this model and no current security assessment belongs in a historical answer. B. Resentment against the Assam government mounted among the hill tribes, who feared assimilation by what they saw as a policy of Assamization, and the demand for a separate hill state gained decisive strength when Assamese leaders moved in 1960 to make Assamese the sole official language of the state; the hill parties merged into the All Party Hill Leaders Conference in 1960, the Assam Official Language Act provoked hartals, demonstrations and a major agitation, the advocates of a separate state won overwhelmingly in the tribal areas in the 1962 elections and boycotted the Assembly, and in 1969 a constitutional amendment carved out Meghalaya as a state within a state with complete autonomy except for law and order. C. The Jharkhand Party was founded in 1950 under the leadership of the Oxford-educated Jaipal Singh to demand a separate tribal state incorporating Chota Nagpur and the Santhal Parganas of south Bihar together with contiguous tribal areas of Madhya Pradesh, Orissa and West Bengal; it won 32 seats in the 1952 elections and emerged as the main opposition party in the Bihar Assembly, then fell to 25 seats in 1957 and 20 seats in 1962, and the States Reorganization Commission of 1955 rejected the demand on the ground that the region did not have a common language while the central government held that tribals being a minority there could not claim a state of their own. D. Scheduled Tribes formed 31.15 per cent of the population of Chota Nagpur and 44.67 per cent of the Santhal Parganas in 1951 and 30.94 and 36.22 per cent respectively in 1971, so that nearly two-thirds of Jharkhand's population in 1971 was non-tribal; the Jharkhand Party had already tried to give its demand a regional character by opening membership to non-tribals, Jaipal Singh and much of the leadership joined the Congress in 1963, and the Jharkhand Mukti Morcha formed in late 1972 with Shibu Soren emerging as its leader recast the demand as a regional one on behalf of the peasants and workers of the region, although the movement never shifted completely from tribal to class-based regional politics because it was built around tribal identity and tribal demands.

Answer: B. Explanation: Resentment against the Assam government mounted among the hill tribes, who feared assimilation by what they saw as a policy of Assamization, and the demand for a separate hill state gained decisive strength when Assamese leaders moved in 1960 to make Assamese the sole official language of the state; the hill parties merged into the All Party Hill Leaders Conference in 1960, the Assam Official Language Act provoked hartals, demonstrations and a major agitation, the advocates of a separate state won overwhelmingly in the tribal areas in the 1962 elections and boycotted the Assembly, and in 1969 a constitutional amendment carved out Meghalaya as a state within a state with complete autonomy except for law and order. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q63. Which option should a candidate retain when revising The hill-state demand, the language trigger and Meghalaya in 1969?

A. The 1971 Census recorded over 400 tribal communities numbering nearly 38 million people and constituting nearly 6.9 per cent of the Indian population, with the greatest concentrations in Madhya Pradesh, Bihar, Orissa, north-eastern India, West Bengal, Maharashtra, Gujarat and Rajasthan; these figures must always carry the 1971 Census attribution and must never be presented as 1951 figures or as current data, and no contemporary tribal statistic may be substituted for them. B. The Jharkhand Party was founded in 1950 under the leadership of the Oxford-educated Jaipal Singh to demand a separate tribal state incorporating Chota Nagpur and the Santhal Parganas of south Bihar together with contiguous tribal areas of Madhya Pradesh, Orissa and West Bengal; it won 32 seats in the 1952 elections and emerged as the main opposition party in the Bihar Assembly, then fell to 25 seats in 1957 and 20 seats in 1962, and the States Reorganization Commission of 1955 rejected the demand on the ground that the region did not have a common language while the central government held that tribals being a minority there could not claim a state of their own. C. Resentment against the Assam government mounted among the hill tribes, who feared assimilation by what they saw as a policy of Assamization, and the demand for a separate hill state gained decisive strength when Assamese leaders moved in 1960 to make Assamese the sole official language of the state; the hill parties merged into the All Party Hill Leaders Conference in 1960, the Assam Official Language Act provoked hartals, demonstrations and a major agitation, the advocates of a separate state won overwhelmingly in the tribal areas in the 1962 elections and boycotted the Assembly, and in 1969 a constitutional amendment carved out Meghalaya as a state within a state with complete autonomy except for law and order. D. Scheduled Tribes formed 31.15 per cent of the population of Chota Nagpur and 44.67 per cent of the Santhal Parganas in 1951 and 30.94 and 36.22 per cent respectively in 1971, so that nearly two-thirds of Jharkhand's population in 1971 was non-tribal; the Jharkhand Party had already tried to give its demand a regional character by opening membership to non-tribals, Jaipal Singh and much of the leadership joined the Congress in 1963, and the Jharkhand Mukti Morcha formed in late 1972 with Shibu Soren emerging as its leader recast the demand as a regional one on behalf of the peasants and workers of the region, although the movement never shifted completely from tribal to class-based regional politics because it was built around tribal identity and tribal demands.

Answer: C. Explanation: Resentment against the Assam government mounted among the hill tribes, who feared assimilation by what they saw as a policy of Assamization, and the demand for a separate hill state gained decisive strength when Assamese leaders moved in 1960 to make Assamese the sole official language of the state; the hill parties merged into the All Party Hill Leaders Conference in 1960, the Assam Official Language Act provoked hartals, demonstrations and a major agitation, the advocates of a separate state won overwhelmingly in the tribal areas in the 1962 elections and boycotted the Assembly, and in 1969 a constitutional amendment carved out Meghalaya as a state within a state with complete autonomy except for law and order. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q64. Which statement avoids a common matching trap about The hill-state demand, the language trigger and Meghalaya in 1969?

A. Except in the North-East the tribal communities constituted minorities in their own home states, and this single demographic asymmetry explains why the republic needed two different constitutional instruments: self-government where a community was territorially dominant, and protective regulation where it was a dispersed minority among non-tribal neighbours. B. Scheduled Tribes formed 31.15 per cent of the population of Chota Nagpur and 44.67 per cent of the Santhal Parganas in 1951 and 30.94 and 36.22 per cent respectively in 1971, so that nearly two-thirds of Jharkhand's population in 1971 was non-tribal; the Jharkhand Party had already tried to give its demand a regional character by opening membership to non-tribals, Jaipal Singh and much of the leadership joined the Congress in 1963, and the Jharkhand Mukti Morcha formed in late 1972 with Shibu Soren emerging as its leader recast the demand as a regional one on behalf of the peasants and workers of the region, although the movement never shifted completely from tribal to class-based regional politics because it was built around tribal identity and tribal demands. C. The 1971 Census recorded over 400 tribal communities numbering nearly 38 million people and constituting nearly

6.9 per cent of the Indian population, with the greatest concentrations in Madhya Pradesh, Bihar, Orissa, north-eastern India, West Bengal, Maharashtra, Gujarat and Rajasthan; these figures must always carry the 1971 Census attribution and must never be presented as 1951 figures or as current data, and no contemporary tribal statistic may be substituted for them. D. Resentment against the Assam government mounted among the hill tribes, who feared assimilation by what they saw as a policy of Assamization, and the demand for a separate hill state gained decisive strength when Assamese leaders moved in 1960 to make Assamese the sole official language of the state; the hill parties merged into the All Party Hill Leaders Conference in 1960, the Assam Official Language Act provoked hartals, demonstrations and a major agitation, the advocates of a separate state won overwhelmingly in the tribal areas in the 1962 elections and boycotted the Assembly, and in 1969 a constitutional amendment carved out Meghalaya as a state within a state with complete autonomy except for law and order.

Answer: D. Explanation: Resentment against the Assam government mounted among the hill tribes, who feared assimilation by what they saw as a policy of Assamization, and the demand for a separate hill state gained decisive strength when Assamese leaders moved in 1960 to make Assamese the sole official language of the state; the hill parties merged into the All Party Hill Leaders Conference in 1960, the Assam Official Language Act provoked hartals, demonstrations and a major agitation, the advocates of a separate state won overwhelmingly in the tribal areas in the 1962 elections and boycotted the Assembly, and in 1969 a constitutional amendment carved out Meghalaya as a state within a state with complete autonomy except for law and order. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q65. Which statement correctly identifies The reorganisation of the North-East in 1972?

A. As part of the reorganisation of the North-East in 1972, Meghalaya became a separate state incorporating the Garo, Khasi and Jaintia tribes, the Union Territories of Manipur and Tripura were simultaneously granted statehood, and NEFA was renamed Arunachal Pradesh; the transition to statehood in the cases of Meghalaya, Manipur, Tripura and Arunachal Pradesh was on the owners' account quite smooth, and Arunachal Pradesh itself attained statehood in 1987. B. The Jharkhand Party was founded in 1950 under the leadership of the Oxford-educated Jaipal Singh to demand a separate tribal state incorporating Chota Nagpur and the Santhal Parganas of south Bihar together with contiguous tribal areas of Madhya Pradesh, Orissa and West Bengal; it won 32 seats in the 1952 elections and emerged as the main opposition party in the Bihar Assembly, then fell to 25 seats in 1957 and 20 seats in 1962, and the States Reorganization Commission of 1955 rejected the demand on the ground that the region did not have a common language while the central government held that tribals being a minority there could not claim a state of their own. C. Unhappiness with the Assam government's relief measures during the famine of 1959 and the passage of the Act in 1961 making Assamese the official language of the state led to the formation of the Mizo National Front under Laldenga, which contested elections while building a military wing trained and armed from outside; in March 1966 the Front declared independence, proclaimed a military uprising and attacked military and civilian targets, the insurrection was crushed within a few weeks by massive counter-insurgency measures although stray guerrilla activity continued, and in 1973, after less extremist Mizo leaders had scaled the demand down to a separate state within the union, the Mizo district was separated from Assam and given the status of a Union Territory as Mizoram. A settlement was finally arrived at in 1986 under which Laldenga and the Front agreed to abandon underground violent activity, surrender with their arms and re-enter the constitutional political stream while the Government of India granted full statehood with guarantees for culture, tradition and land laws, and a government with Laldenga as chief minister was formed in the new state of Mizoram in February 1987; Mizoram is the model case of an insurgency ending with its leader as elected head of a new state, and it must be presented as the successful case rather than as the universal outcome, because not every North-Eastern conflict was settled on this model and no current security assessment belongs in a historical answer. D. Scheduled Tribes formed 31.15 per cent of the population of Chota Nagpur and 44.67 per cent of the Santhal Parganas in 1951 and 30.94 and 36.22 per cent respectively in 1971, so that nearly two-thirds of Jharkhand's population in 1971 was non-tribal; the Jharkhand Party had already tried to give its demand a regional character by opening membership to non-tribals, Jaipal Singh and much of the leadership joined the Congress in 1963, and the Jharkhand Mukti Morcha formed in late 1972 with Shibu Soren emerging as its leader recast the demand as a regional one on behalf of the peasants and workers of the region, although the movement never shifted completely from tribal to class-based regional politics because it was built around tribal identity and tribal demands.

Answer: A. Explanation: As part of the reorganisation of the North-East in 1972, Meghalaya became a separate state incorporating the Garo, Khasi and Jaintia tribes, the Union Territories of Manipur and Tripura were simultaneously granted statehood, and NEFA was renamed Arunachal Pradesh; the transition to statehood in the cases of Meghalaya, Manipur, Tripura and Arunachal Pradesh was on the owners' account quite smooth, and Arunachal Pradesh itself attained statehood in 1987. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q66. Which chronology card should be filed under The reorganisation of the North-East in 1972?

A. The 1971 Census recorded over 400 tribal communities numbering nearly 38 million people and constituting nearly 6.9 per cent of the Indian population, with the greatest concentrations in Madhya Pradesh, Bihar, Orissa, north-eastern India, West Bengal, Maharashtra, Gujarat and Rajasthan; these figures must always carry the 1971 Census attribution and must never be presented as 1951 figures or as current data, and no contemporary tribal statistic may be substituted for them. B. As part of the reorganisation of the North-East in 1972, Meghalaya became a separate state incorporating the Garo, Khasi and Jaintia tribes, the Union Territories of Manipur and Tripura were simultaneously granted statehood, and NEFA was renamed Arunachal Pradesh; the transition to statehood in the cases of Meghalaya, Manipur, Tripura and Arunachal Pradesh was on the owners' account quite smooth, and Arunachal Pradesh itself attained statehood in 1987. C. The Jharkhand Party was founded in 1950 under the leadership of the Oxford-educated Jaipal Singh to demand a separate tribal state incorporating Chota Nagpur and the Santhal Parganas of south Bihar together with contiguous tribal areas of Madhya Pradesh, Orissa and West Bengal; it won 32 seats in the 1952 elections and emerged as the main opposition party in the Bihar Assembly, then fell to 25 seats in 1957 and 20 seats in 1962, and the States Reorganization Commission of 1955 rejected the demand on the ground that the region did not have a common language while the central government held that tribals being a minority there could not claim a state of their own. D. Scheduled Tribes formed 31.15 per cent of the population of Chota Nagpur and 44.67 per cent of the Santhal Parganas in 1951 and 30.94 and 36.22 per cent respectively in 1971, so that nearly two-thirds of Jharkhand's population in 1971 was non-tribal; the Jharkhand Party had already tried to give its demand a regional character by opening membership to non-tribals, Jaipal Singh and much of the leadership joined the Congress in 1963, and the Jharkhand Mukti Morcha formed in late 1972 with Shibu Soren emerging as its leader recast the demand as a regional one on behalf of the peasants and workers of the region, although the movement never shifted completely from tribal to class-based regional politics because it was built around tribal identity and tribal demands.

Answer: B. Explanation: As part of the reorganisation of the North-East in 1972, Meghalaya became a separate state incorporating the Garo, Khasi and Jaintia tribes, the Union Territories of Manipur and Tripura were simultaneously granted statehood, and NEFA was renamed Arunachal Pradesh; the transition to statehood in the cases of Meghalaya, Manipur, Tripura and Arunachal Pradesh was on the owners' account quite smooth, and Arunachal Pradesh itself attained statehood in 1987. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q67. Which option should a candidate retain when revising The reorganisation of the North-East in 1972?

A. Scheduled Tribes formed 31.15 per cent of the population of Chota Nagpur and 44.67 per cent of the Santhal Parganas in 1951 and 30.94 and 36.22 per cent respectively in 1971, so that nearly two-thirds of Jharkhand's population in 1971 was non-tribal; the Jharkhand Party had already tried to give its demand a regional character by opening membership to non-tribals, Jaipal Singh and much of the leadership joined the Congress in 1963, and the Jharkhand Mukti Morcha formed in late 1972 with Shibu Soren emerging as its leader recast the demand as a regional one on behalf of the peasants and workers of the region, although the movement never shifted completely from tribal to class-based regional politics because it was built around tribal identity and tribal demands. B. Except in the North-East the tribal communities constituted minorities in their own home states, and this single demographic asymmetry explains why the republic needed two different constitutional instruments: self-government where a community was territorially dominant, and protective regulation where it was a dispersed minority among non-tribal neighbours. C. As part of the reorganisation of the North-East in 1972, Meghalaya became a separate state incorporating the Garo, Khasi and Jaintia tribes, the Union Territories of Manipur and Tripura were simultaneously granted statehood, and NEFA was renamed Arunachal Pradesh; the transition to statehood in the cases of Meghalaya, Manipur, Tripura and Arunachal Pradesh was on the owners' account quite smooth, and Arunachal Pradesh itself attained statehood in 1987. D. The 1971 Census recorded over 400 tribal communities numbering nearly 38 million people and constituting nearly 6.9 per cent of the Indian population, with the greatest concentrations in Madhya Pradesh, Bihar, Orissa, north-eastern India, West Bengal, Maharashtra, Gujarat and Rajasthan; these figures must always carry the 1971 Census attribution and must never be presented as 1951 figures or as current data, and no contemporary tribal statistic may be substituted for them.

Answer: C. Explanation: As part of the reorganisation of the North-East in 1972, Meghalaya became a separate state incorporating the Garo, Khasi and Jaintia tribes, the Union Territories of Manipur and Tripura were simultaneously granted statehood, and NEFA was renamed Arunachal Pradesh; the transition to statehood in the cases of Meghalaya, Manipur, Tripura and Arunachal Pradesh was on the owners' account quite smooth, and Arunachal Pradesh itself attained statehood in 1987. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q68. Which statement avoids a common matching trap about The reorganisation of the North-East in 1972?

A. Except in the North-East the tribal communities constituted minorities in their own home states, and this single demographic asymmetry explains why the republic needed two different constitutional instruments: self-government where a community was territorially dominant, and protective regulation where it was a dispersed minority among non-tribal neighbours. B. The 1971 Census recorded over 400 tribal communities numbering nearly 38 million people and constituting nearly 6.9 per cent of the Indian population, with the greatest concentrations in Madhya Pradesh, Bihar, Orissa, north-eastern India, West Bengal, Maharashtra, Gujarat and Rajasthan; these figures must always carry the 1971 Census attribution and must never be presented as 1951 figures or as current data, and no contemporary tribal statistic may be substituted for them. C. Colonialism brought a radical transformation as the tribals' relative isolation was eroded by the penetration of market forces and by integration into British and princely administrations, and money-lenders, traders, revenue farmers, middlemen and petty officials invaded tribal areas until families were engulfed in debt and lost their land to outsiders, many being reduced to agricultural labourers, sharecroppers and rack-rented tenants while belated legislation against land alienation failed to halt the process. D. As part of the reorganisation of the North-East in 1972, Meghalaya became a separate state incorporating the Garo, Khasi and Jaintia tribes, the Union Territories of Manipur and Tripura were simultaneously granted statehood, and NEFA was renamed Arunachal Pradesh; the transition to statehood in the cases of Meghalaya, Manipur, Tripura and Arunachal Pradesh was on the owners' account quite smooth, and Arunachal Pradesh itself attained statehood in 1987.

Answer: D. Explanation: As part of the reorganisation of the North-East in 1972, Meghalaya became a separate state incorporating the Garo, Khasi and Jaintia tribes, the Union Territories of Manipur and Tripura were simultaneously granted statehood, and NEFA was renamed Arunachal Pradesh; the transition to statehood in the cases of Meghalaya, Manipur, Tripura and Arunachal Pradesh was on the owners' account quite smooth, and Arunachal Pradesh itself attained statehood in 1987. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q69. Which statement correctly identifies The Mizo uprising, Union Territory in 1973 and statehood in February 1987?

A. Unhappiness with the Assam government's relief measures during the famine of 1959 and the passage of the Act in 1961 making Assamese the official language of the state led to the formation of the Mizo National Front under Laldenga, which contested elections while building a military wing trained and armed from outside; in March 1966 the Front declared independence, proclaimed a military uprising and attacked military and civilian targets, the insurrection was crushed within a few weeks by massive counter-insurgency measures although stray guerrilla activity continued, and in 1973, after less extremist Mizo leaders had scaled the demand down to a separate state within the union, the Mizo district was separated from Assam and given the status of a Union Territory as Mizoram. A settlement was finally arrived at in 1986 under which Laldenga and the Front agreed to abandon underground violent activity, surrender with their arms and re-enter the constitutional political stream while the Government of India granted full statehood with guarantees for culture, tradition and land laws, and a government with Laldenga as chief minister was formed in the new state of Mizoram in February 1987; Mizoram is the model case of an insurgency ending with its leader as elected head of a new state, and it must be presented as the successful case rather than as the universal outcome, because not every North-Eastern conflict was settled on this model and no current security assessment belongs in a historical answer. B. The Jharkhand Party was founded in 1950 under the leadership of the Oxford-educated Jaipal Singh to demand a separate tribal state incorporating Chota Nagpur and the Santhal Parganas of south Bihar together with contiguous tribal areas of Madhya Pradesh, Orissa and West Bengal; it won 32 seats in the 1952 elections and emerged as the main opposition party in the Bihar Assembly, then fell to 25 seats in 1957 and 20 seats in 1962, and the States Reorganization Commission of 1955 rejected the demand on the ground that the region did not have a common language while the central government held that tribals being a minority there could not claim a state of their own. C. Scheduled Tribes formed 31.15 per cent of the population of Chota Nagpur and 44.67 per cent of the Santhal Parganas in 1951 and 30.94 and 36.22 per cent respectively in 1971, so that nearly two-thirds of Jharkhand's population in 1971 was non-tribal; the Jharkhand Party had already tried to give its demand a regional character by opening membership to non-tribals, Jaipal Singh and much of the leadership joined the Congress in 1963, and the Jharkhand Mukti Morcha formed in late 1972 with Shibu Soren emerging as its leader recast the demand as a regional one on behalf of the peasants and workers of the region, although the movement never shifted completely from tribal to class-based regional politics because it was built around tribal identity and tribal demands. D. The 1971 Census recorded over 400 tribal communities numbering nearly 38 million people and constituting nearly 6.9 per cent of the Indian population, with the greatest concentrations in Madhya Pradesh, Bihar, Orissa, north-eastern India, West Bengal, Maharashtra, Gujarat and Rajasthan; these figures must always carry the 1971 Census attribution and must never be presented as 1951 figures or as current data, and no contemporary tribal statistic may be substituted for them.

Answer: A. Explanation: Unhappiness with the Assam government's relief measures during the famine of 1959 and the passage of the Act in 1961 making Assamese the official language of the state led to the formation of the Mizo National Front under Laldenga, which contested elections while building a military wing trained and armed from outside; in March 1966 the Front declared independence, proclaimed a military uprising and attacked military and civilian targets, the insurrection was crushed within a few weeks by massive counter-insurgency measures although stray guerrilla activity continued, and in 1973, after less extremist Mizo leaders had scaled the demand down to a separate state within the union, the Mizo district was separated from Assam and given the status of a Union Territory as Mizoram. A settlement was finally arrived at in 1986 under which Laldenga and the Front agreed to abandon underground violent activity, surrender with their arms and re-enter the constitutional political stream while the Government of India granted full statehood with guarantees for culture, tradition and land laws, and a government with Laldenga as chief minister was formed in the new state of Mizoram in February 1987; Mizoram is the model case of an insurgency ending with its leader as elected head of a new state, and it must be presented as the successful case rather than as the universal outcome, because not every North-Eastern conflict was settled on this model and no current security assessment belongs in a historical answer. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q70. Which chronology card should be filed under The Mizo uprising, Union Territory in 1973 and statehood in February 1987?

A. Except in the North-East the tribal communities constituted minorities in their own home states, and this single demographic asymmetry explains why the republic needed two different constitutional instruments: self-government where a community was territorially dominant, and protective regulation where it was a dispersed minority among non-tribal neighbours. B. Unhappiness with the Assam government's relief measures during the famine of 1959 and the passage of the Act in 1961 making Assamese the official language of the state led to the formation of the Mizo National Front under Laldenga, which contested elections while building a military wing trained and armed from outside; in March 1966 the Front declared independence, proclaimed a military uprising and attacked military and civilian targets, the insurrection was crushed within a few weeks by massive counter-insurgency measures although stray guerrilla activity continued, and in 1973, after less extremist Mizo leaders had scaled the demand down to a separate state within the union, the Mizo district was separated from Assam and given the status of a Union Territory as Mizoram. A settlement was finally arrived at in 1986 under which Laldenga and the Front agreed to abandon underground violent activity, surrender with their arms and re-enter the constitutional political stream while the Government of India granted full statehood with guarantees for culture, tradition and land laws, and a government with Laldenga as chief minister was formed in the new state of Mizoram in February 1987; Mizoram is the model case of an insurgency ending with its leader as elected head of a new state, and it must be presented as the successful case rather than as the universal outcome, because not every North-Eastern conflict was settled on this model and no current security assessment belongs in a historical answer. C. The 1971 Census recorded over 400 tribal communities numbering nearly 38 million people and constituting nearly 6.9 per cent of the Indian population, with the greatest concentrations in Madhya Pradesh, Bihar, Orissa, north-eastern India, West Bengal, Maharashtra, Gujarat and Rajasthan; these figures must always carry the 1971 Census attribution and must never be presented as 1951 figures or as current data, and no contemporary tribal statistic may be substituted for them. D. Scheduled Tribes formed 31.15 per cent of the population of Chota Nagpur and 44.67 per cent of the Santhal Parganas in 1951 and 30.94 and 36.22 per cent respectively in 1971, so that nearly two-thirds of Jharkhand's population in 1971 was non-tribal; the Jharkhand Party had already tried to give its demand a regional character by opening membership to non-tribals, Jaipal Singh and much of the leadership joined the Congress in 1963, and the Jharkhand Mukti Morcha formed in late 1972 with Shibu Soren emerging as its leader recast the demand as a regional one on behalf of the peasants and workers of the region, although the movement never shifted completely from tribal to class-based regional politics because it was built around tribal identity and tribal demands.

Answer: B. Explanation: Unhappiness with the Assam government's relief measures during the famine of 1959 and the passage of the Act in 1961 making Assamese the official language of the state led to the formation of the Mizo National Front under Laldenga, which contested elections while building a military wing trained and armed from outside; in March 1966 the Front declared independence, proclaimed a military uprising and attacked military and civilian targets, the insurrection was crushed within a few weeks by massive counter-insurgency measures although stray guerrilla activity continued, and in 1973, after less extremist Mizo leaders had scaled the demand down to a separate state within the union, the Mizo district was separated from Assam and given the status of a Union Territory as Mizoram. A settlement was finally arrived at in 1986 under which Laldenga and the Front agreed to abandon underground violent activity, surrender with their arms and re-enter the constitutional political stream while the Government of India granted full statehood with guarantees for culture, tradition and land laws, and a government with Laldenga as chief minister was formed in the new state of Mizoram in February 1987; Mizoram is the model case of an insurgency ending with its leader as elected head of a new state, and it must be presented as the successful case rather than as the universal outcome, because not every North-Eastern conflict was settled on this model and no current security assessment belongs in a historical answer. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q71. Which option should a candidate retain when revising The Mizo uprising, Union Territory in 1973 and statehood in February 1987?

A. The 1971 Census recorded over 400 tribal communities numbering nearly 38 million people and constituting nearly 6.9 per cent of the Indian population, with the greatest concentrations in Madhya Pradesh, Bihar, Orissa, north-eastern India, West Bengal, Maharashtra, Gujarat and Rajasthan; these figures must always carry the 1971 Census attribution and must never be presented as 1951 figures or as current data, and no contemporary tribal statistic may be substituted for them. B. Except in the North-East the tribal communities constituted minorities in their own home states, and this single demographic asymmetry explains why the republic needed two different constitutional instruments: self-government where a community was territorially dominant, and protective regulation where it was a dispersed minority among non-tribal neighbours. C. Unhappiness with the Assam government's relief measures during the famine of 1959 and the passage of the Act in 1961 making Assamese the official language of the state led to the formation of the Mizo National Front under Laldenga, which contested elections while building a military wing trained and armed from outside; in March 1966 the Front declared independence, proclaimed a military uprising and attacked military and civilian targets, the insurrection was crushed within a few weeks by massive counter-insurgency measures although stray guerrilla activity continued, and in 1973, after less extremist Mizo leaders had scaled the demand down to a separate state within the union, the Mizo district was separated from Assam and given the status of a Union Territory as Mizoram. A settlement was finally arrived at in 1986 under which Laldenga and the Front agreed to abandon underground violent activity, surrender with their arms and re-enter the constitutional political stream while the Government of India granted full statehood with guarantees for culture, tradition and land laws, and a government with Laldenga as chief minister was formed in the new state of Mizoram in February 1987; Mizoram is the model case of an insurgency ending with its leader as elected head of a new state, and it must be presented as the successful case rather than as the universal outcome, because not every North-Eastern conflict was settled on this model and no current security assessment belongs in a historical answer. D. Colonialism brought a radical transformation as the tribals' relative isolation was eroded by the penetration of market forces and by integration into British and princely administrations, and money-lenders, traders, revenue farmers, middlemen and petty officials invaded tribal areas until families were engulfed in debt and lost their land to outsiders, many being reduced to agricultural labourers, sharecroppers and rack-rented tenants while belated legislation against land alienation failed to halt the process.

Answer: C. Explanation: Unhappiness with the Assam government's relief measures during the famine of 1959 and the passage of the Act in 1961 making Assamese the official language of the state led to the formation of the Mizo National Front under Laldenga, which contested elections while building a military wing trained and armed from outside; in March 1966 the Front declared independence, proclaimed a military uprising and attacked military and civilian targets, the insurrection was crushed within a few weeks by massive counter-insurgency measures although stray guerrilla activity continued, and in 1973, after less extremist Mizo leaders had scaled the demand down to a separate state within the union, the Mizo district was separated from Assam and given the status of a Union Territory as Mizoram. A settlement was finally arrived at in 1986 under which Laldenga and the Front agreed to abandon underground violent activity, surrender with their arms and re-enter the constitutional political stream while the Government of India granted full statehood with guarantees for culture, tradition and land laws, and a government with Laldenga as chief minister was formed in the new state of Mizoram in February 1987; Mizoram is the model case of an insurgency ending with its leader as elected head of a new state, and it must be presented as the successful case rather than as the universal outcome, because not every North-Eastern conflict was settled on this model and no current security assessment belongs in a historical answer. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q72. Which statement avoids a common matching trap about The Mizo uprising, Union Territory in 1973 and statehood in February 1987?

A. Except in the North-East the tribal communities constituted minorities in their own home states, and this single demographic asymmetry explains why the republic needed two different constitutional instruments: self-government where a community was territorially dominant, and protective regulation where it was a dispersed minority among non-tribal neighbours. B. To conserve forests and to facilitate their commercial exploitation the colonial authorities brought large tracts under forest laws that forbade shifting cultivation and severely restricted tribal use of the forest and access to its products, and the combination of land loss, indebtedness, exploitation by middlemen and extortion by police and forest officials produced a series of nineteenth- and twentieth-century uprisings including the Santhal uprising and the Munda rebellion led by Birsa Munda, and drew tribal people into the national and peasant movements. C. Colonialism brought a radical transformation as the tribals' relative isolation was eroded by the penetration of market forces and by integration into British and princely administrations, and money-lenders, traders, revenue farmers, middlemen and petty officials invaded tribal areas until families were engulfed in debt and lost their land to outsiders, many being reduced to agricultural labourers, sharecroppers and rack-rented tenants while belated legislation against land alienation failed to halt the process. D. Unhappiness with the Assam government's relief measures during the famine of 1959 and the passage of the Act in 1961 making Assamese the official language of the state led to the formation of the Mizo National Front under Laldenga, which contested elections while building a military wing trained and armed from outside; in March 1966 the Front declared independence, proclaimed a military uprising and attacked military and civilian targets, the insurrection was crushed within a few weeks by massive counter-insurgency measures although stray guerrilla activity continued, and in 1973, after less extremist Mizo leaders had scaled the demand down to a separate state within the union, the Mizo district was separated from Assam and given the status of a Union Territory as Mizoram. A settlement was finally arrived at in 1986 under which Laldenga and the Front agreed to abandon underground violent activity, surrender with their arms and re-enter the constitutional political stream while the Government of India granted full statehood with guarantees for culture, tradition and land laws, and a government with Laldenga as chief minister was formed in the new state of Mizoram in February 1987; Mizoram is the model case of an insurgency ending with its leader as elected head of a new state, and it must be presented as the successful case rather than as the universal outcome, because not every North-Eastern conflict was settled on this model and no current security assessment belongs in a historical answer.

Answer: D. Explanation: Unhappiness with the Assam government's relief measures during the famine of 1959 and the passage of the Act in 1961 making Assamese the official language of the state led to the formation of the Mizo National Front under Laldenga, which contested elections while building a military wing trained and armed from outside; in March 1966 the Front declared independence, proclaimed a military uprising and attacked military and civilian targets, the insurrection was crushed within a few weeks by massive counter-insurgency measures although stray guerrilla activity continued, and in 1973, after less extremist Mizo leaders had scaled the demand down to a separate state within the union, the Mizo district was separated from Assam and given the status of a Union Territory as Mizoram. A settlement was finally arrived at in 1986 under which Laldenga and the Front agreed to abandon underground violent activity, surrender with their arms and re-enter the constitutional political stream while the Government of India granted full statehood with guarantees for culture, tradition and land laws, and a government with Laldenga as chief minister was formed in the new state of Mizoram in February 1987; Mizoram is the model case of an insurgency ending with its leader as elected head of a new state, and it must be presented as the successful case rather than as the universal outcome, because not every North-Eastern conflict was settled on this model and no current security assessment belongs in a historical answer. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q73. Which statement correctly identifies The Jharkhand Party from 1950 and its 32 seats in 1952?

A. The Jharkhand Party was founded in 1950 under the leadership of the Oxford-educated Jaipal Singh to demand a separate tribal state incorporating Chota Nagpur and the Santhal Parganas of south Bihar together with contiguous tribal areas of Madhya Pradesh, Orissa and West Bengal; it won 32 seats in the 1952 elections and emerged as the main opposition party in the Bihar Assembly, then fell to 25 seats in 1957 and 20 seats in 1962, and the States Reorganization Commission of 1955 rejected the demand on the ground that the region did not have a common language while the central government held that tribals being a minority there could not claim a state of their own. B. Scheduled Tribes formed 31.15 per cent of the population of Chota Nagpur and 44.67 per cent of the Santhal Parganas in 1951 and 30.94 and 36.22 per cent respectively in 1971, so that nearly two-thirds of Jharkhand's population in 1971 was non-tribal; the Jharkhand Party had already tried to give its demand a regional character by opening membership to non-tribals, Jaipal Singh and much of the leadership joined the Congress in 1963, and the Jharkhand Mukti Morcha formed in late 1972 with Shibu Soren emerging as its leader recast the demand as a regional one on behalf of the peasants and workers of the region, although the movement never shifted completely from tribal to class-based regional politics because it was built around tribal identity and tribal demands. C. Except in the North-East the tribal communities constituted minorities in their own home states, and this single demographic asymmetry explains why the republic needed two different constitutional instruments: self-government where a community was territorially dominant, and protective regulation where it was a dispersed minority among non-tribal neighbours. D. The 1971 Census recorded over 400 tribal communities numbering nearly 38 million people and constituting nearly 6.9 per cent of the Indian population, with the greatest concentrations in Madhya Pradesh, Bihar, Orissa, north-eastern India, West Bengal, Maharashtra, Gujarat and Rajasthan; these figures must always carry the 1971 Census attribution and must never be presented as 1951 figures or as current data, and no contemporary tribal statistic may be substituted for them.

Answer: A. Explanation: The Jharkhand Party was founded in 1950 under the leadership of the Oxford-educated Jaipal Singh to demand a separate tribal state incorporating Chota Nagpur and the Santhal Parganas of south Bihar together with contiguous tribal areas of Madhya Pradesh, Orissa and West Bengal; it won 32 seats in the 1952 elections and emerged as the main opposition party in the Bihar Assembly, then fell to 25 seats in 1957 and 20 seats in 1962, and the States Reorganization Commission of 1955 rejected the demand on the ground that the region did not have a common language while the central government held that tribals being a minority there could not claim a state of their own. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q74. Which chronology card should be filed under The Jharkhand Party from 1950 and its 32 seats in 1952?

A. Colonialism brought a radical transformation as the tribals' relative isolation was eroded by the penetration of market forces and by integration into British and princely administrations, and money-lenders, traders, revenue farmers, middlemen and petty officials invaded tribal areas until families were engulfed in debt and lost their land to outsiders, many being reduced to agricultural labourers, sharecroppers and rack-rented tenants while belated legislation against land alienation failed to halt the process. B. The Jharkhand Party was founded in 1950 under the leadership of the Oxford-educated Jaipal Singh to demand a separate tribal state incorporating Chota Nagpur and the Santhal Parganas of south Bihar together with contiguous tribal areas of Madhya Pradesh, Orissa and West Bengal; it won 32 seats in the 1952 elections and emerged as the main opposition party in the Bihar Assembly, then fell to 25 seats in 1957 and 20 seats in 1962, and the States Reorganization Commission of 1955 rejected the demand on the ground that the region did not have a common language while the central government held that tribals being a minority there could not claim a state of their own. C. The 1971 Census recorded over 400 tribal communities numbering nearly 38 million people and constituting nearly 6.9 per cent of the Indian population, with the greatest concentrations in Madhya Pradesh, Bihar, Orissa, north-eastern India, West Bengal, Maharashtra, Gujarat and Rajasthan; these figures must always carry the 1971 Census attribution and must never be presented as 1951 figures or as current data, and no contemporary tribal statistic may be substituted for them. D. Except in the North-East the tribal communities constituted minorities in their own home states, and this single demographic asymmetry explains why the republic needed two different constitutional instruments: self-government where a community was territorially dominant, and protective regulation where it was a dispersed minority among non-tribal neighbours.

Answer: B. Explanation: The Jharkhand Party was founded in 1950 under the leadership of the Oxford-educated Jaipal Singh to demand a separate tribal state incorporating Chota Nagpur and the Santhal Parganas of south Bihar together with contiguous tribal areas of Madhya Pradesh, Orissa and West Bengal; it won 32 seats in the 1952 elections and emerged as the main opposition party in the Bihar Assembly, then fell to 25 seats in 1957 and 20 seats in 1962, and the States Reorganization Commission of 1955 rejected the demand on the ground that the region did not have a common language while the central government held that tribals being a minority there could not claim a state of their own. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q75. Which option should a candidate retain when revising The Jharkhand Party from 1950 and its 32 seats in 1952?

A. To conserve forests and to facilitate their commercial exploitation the colonial authorities brought large tracts under forest laws that forbade shifting cultivation and severely restricted tribal use of the forest and access to its products, and the combination of land loss, indebtedness, exploitation by middlemen and extortion by police and forest officials produced a series of nineteenth- and twentieth-century uprisings including the Santhal uprising and the Munda rebellion led by Birsa Munda, and drew tribal people into the national and peasant movements. B. Colonialism brought a radical transformation as the tribals' relative isolation was eroded by the penetration of market forces and by integration into British and princely administrations, and money-lenders, traders, revenue farmers, middlemen and petty officials invaded tribal areas until families were engulfed in debt and lost their land to outsiders, many being reduced to agricultural labourers, sharecroppers and rack-rented tenants while belated legislation against land alienation failed to halt the process. C. The Jharkhand Party was founded in 1950 under the leadership of the Oxford-educated Jaipal Singh to demand a separate tribal state incorporating Chota Nagpur and the Santhal Parganas of south Bihar together with contiguous tribal areas of Madhya Pradesh, Orissa and West Bengal; it won 32 seats in the 1952 elections and emerged as the main opposition party in the Bihar Assembly, then fell to 25 seats in 1957 and 20 seats in 1962, and the States Reorganization Commission of 1955 rejected the demand on the ground that the region did not have a common language while the central government held that tribals being a minority there could not claim a state of their own. D. Except in the North-East the tribal communities constituted minorities in their own home states, and this single demographic asymmetry explains why the republic needed two different constitutional instruments: self-government where a community was territorially dominant, and protective regulation where it was a dispersed minority among non-tribal neighbours.

Answer: C. Explanation: The Jharkhand Party was founded in 1950 under the leadership of the Oxford-educated Jaipal Singh to demand a separate tribal state incorporating Chota Nagpur and the Santhal Parganas of south Bihar together with contiguous tribal areas of Madhya Pradesh, Orissa and West Bengal; it won 32 seats in the 1952 elections and emerged as the main opposition party in the Bihar Assembly, then fell to 25 seats in 1957 and 20 seats in 1962, and the States Reorganization Commission of 1955 rejected the demand on the ground that the region did not have a common language while the central government held that tribals being a minority there could not claim a state of their own. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q76. Which statement avoids a common matching trap about The Jharkhand Party from 1950 and its 32 seats in 1952?

A. Verrier Elwin, who lived nearly all his life among the tribal people of central and north-eastern India, was one of the formative influences on the new government's policies and recorded that under British rule tribal people suffered oppression and exploitation as merchants and liquor-vendors cajoled, tricked and swindled them until their broad acres dwindled; his influence underwrote a policy of integration without imposition rather than a policy of rescue or of tutelage. B. Colonialism brought a radical transformation as the tribals' relative isolation was eroded by the penetration of market forces and by integration into British and princely administrations, and money-lenders, traders, revenue farmers, middlemen and petty officials invaded tribal areas until families were engulfed in debt and lost their land to outsiders, many being reduced to agricultural labourers, sharecroppers and rack-rented tenants while belated legislation against land alienation failed to halt the process. C. To conserve forests and to facilitate their commercial exploitation the colonial authorities brought large tracts under forest laws that forbade shifting cultivation and severely restricted tribal use of the forest and access to its products, and the combination of land loss, indebtedness, exploitation by middlemen and extortion by police and forest officials produced a series of nineteenth- and twentieth-century uprisings including the Santhal uprising and the Munda rebellion led by Birsa Munda, and drew tribal people into the national and peasant movements. D. The Jharkhand Party was founded in 1950 under the leadership of the Oxford-educated Jaipal Singh to demand a separate tribal state incorporating Chota Nagpur and the Santhal Parganas of south Bihar together with contiguous tribal areas of Madhya Pradesh, Orissa and West Bengal; it won 32 seats in the 1952 elections and emerged as the main opposition party in the Bihar Assembly, then fell to 25 seats in 1957 and 20 seats in 1962, and the States Reorganization Commission of 1955 rejected the demand on the ground that the region did not have a common language while the central government held that tribals being a minority there could not claim a state of their own.

Answer: D. Explanation: The Jharkhand Party was founded in 1950 under the leadership of the Oxford-educated Jaipal Singh to demand a separate tribal state incorporating Chota Nagpur and the Santhal Parganas of south Bihar together with contiguous tribal areas of Madhya Pradesh, Orissa and West Bengal; it won 32 seats in the 1952 elections and emerged as the main opposition party in the Bihar Assembly, then fell to 25 seats in 1957 and 20 seats in 1962, and the States Reorganization Commission of 1955 rejected the demand on the ground that the region did not have a common language while the central government held that tribals being a minority there could not claim a state of their own. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q77. Which statement correctly identifies The demographic turn to a regional demand?

A. Scheduled Tribes formed 31.15 per cent of the population of Chota Nagpur and 44.67 per cent of the Santhal Parganas in 1951 and 30.94 and 36.22 per cent respectively in 1971, so that nearly two-thirds of Jharkhand's population in 1971 was non-tribal; the Jharkhand Party had already tried to give its demand a regional character by opening membership to non-tribals, Jaipal Singh and much of the leadership joined the Congress in 1963, and the Jharkhand Mukti Morcha formed in late 1972 with Shibu Soren emerging as its leader recast the demand as a regional one on behalf of the peasants and workers of the region, although the movement never shifted completely from tribal to class-based regional politics because it was built around tribal identity and tribal demands. B. The 1971 Census recorded over 400 tribal communities numbering nearly 38 million people and constituting nearly 6.9 per cent of the Indian population, with the greatest concentrations in Madhya Pradesh, Bihar, Orissa, north-eastern India, West Bengal, Maharashtra, Gujarat and Rajasthan; these figures must always carry the 1971 Census attribution and must never be presented as 1951 figures or as current data, and no contemporary tribal statistic may be substituted for them. C. Colonialism brought a radical transformation as the tribals' relative isolation was eroded by the penetration of market forces and by integration into British and princely administrations, and money-lenders, traders, revenue farmers, middlemen and petty officials invaded tribal areas until families were engulfed in debt and lost their land to outsiders, many being reduced to agricultural labourers, sharecroppers and rack-rented tenants while belated legislation against land alienation failed to halt the process. D. Except in the North-East the tribal communities constituted minorities in their own home states, and this single demographic asymmetry explains why the republic needed two different constitutional instruments: self-government where a community was territorially dominant, and protective regulation where it was a dispersed minority among non-tribal neighbours.

Answer: A. Explanation: Scheduled Tribes formed 31.15 per cent of the population of Chota Nagpur and 44.67 per cent of the Santhal Parganas in 1951 and 30.94 and 36.22 per cent respectively in 1971, so that nearly two-thirds of Jharkhand's population in 1971 was non-tribal; the Jharkhand Party had already tried to give its demand a regional character by opening membership to non-tribals, Jaipal Singh and much of the leadership joined the Congress in 1963, and the Jharkhand Mukti Morcha formed in late 1972 with Shibu Soren emerging as its leader recast the demand as a regional one on behalf of the peasants and workers of the region, although the movement never shifted completely from tribal to class-based regional politics because it was built around tribal identity and tribal demands. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q78. Which chronology card should be filed under The demographic turn to a regional demand?

A. Colonialism brought a radical transformation as the tribals' relative isolation was eroded by the penetration of market forces and by integration into British and princely administrations, and money-lenders, traders, revenue farmers, middlemen and petty officials invaded tribal areas until families were engulfed in debt and lost their land to outsiders, many being reduced to agricultural labourers, sharecroppers and rack-rented tenants while belated legislation against land alienation failed to halt the process. B. Scheduled Tribes formed 31.15 per cent of the population of Chota Nagpur and 44.67 per cent of the Santhal Parganas in 1951 and 30.94 and 36.22 per cent respectively in 1971, so that nearly two-thirds of Jharkhand's population in 1971 was non-tribal; the Jharkhand Party had already tried to give its demand a regional character by opening membership to non-tribals, Jaipal Singh and much of the leadership joined the Congress in 1963, and the Jharkhand Mukti Morcha formed in late 1972 with Shibu Soren emerging as its leader recast the demand as a regional one on behalf of the peasants and workers of the region, although the movement never shifted completely from tribal to class-based regional politics because it was built around tribal identity and tribal demands. C. To conserve forests and to facilitate their commercial exploitation the colonial authorities brought large tracts under forest laws that forbade shifting cultivation and severely restricted tribal use of the forest and access to its products, and the combination of land loss, indebtedness, exploitation by middlemen and extortion by police and forest officials produced a series of nineteenth- and twentieth-century uprisings including the Santhal uprising and the Munda rebellion led by Birsa Munda, and drew tribal people into the national and peasant movements. D. Except in the North-East the tribal communities constituted minorities in their own home states, and this single demographic asymmetry explains why the republic needed two different constitutional instruments: self-government where a community was territorially dominant, and protective regulation where it was a dispersed minority among non-tribal neighbours.

Answer: B. Explanation: Scheduled Tribes formed 31.15 per cent of the population of Chota Nagpur and 44.67 per cent of the Santhal Parganas in 1951 and 30.94 and 36.22 per cent respectively in 1971, so that nearly two-thirds of Jharkhand's population in 1971 was non-tribal; the Jharkhand Party had already tried to give its demand a regional character by opening membership to non-tribals, Jaipal Singh and much of the leadership joined the Congress in 1963, and the Jharkhand Mukti Morcha formed in late 1972 with Shibu Soren emerging as its leader recast the demand as a regional one on behalf of the peasants and workers of the region, although the movement never shifted completely from tribal to class-based regional politics because it was built around tribal identity and tribal demands. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q79. Which option should a candidate retain when revising The demographic turn to a regional demand?

A. To conserve forests and to facilitate their commercial exploitation the colonial authorities brought large tracts under forest laws that forbade shifting cultivation and severely restricted tribal use of the forest and access to its products, and the combination of land loss, indebtedness, exploitation by middlemen and extortion by police and forest officials produced a series of nineteenth- and twentieth-century uprisings including the Santhal uprising and the Munda rebellion led by Birsa Munda, and drew tribal people into the national and peasant movements. B. Verrier Elwin, who lived nearly all his life among the tribal people of central and north-eastern India, was one of the formative influences on the new government's policies and recorded that under British rule tribal people suffered oppression and exploitation as merchants and liquor-vendors cajoled, tricked and swindled them until their broad acres dwindled; his influence underwrote a policy of integration without imposition rather than a policy of rescue or of tutelage. C. Scheduled Tribes formed 31.15 per cent of the population of Chota Nagpur and 44.67 per cent of the Santhal

Parganas in 1951 and 30.94 and 36.22 per cent respectively in 1971, so that nearly two-thirds of Jharkhand's population in 1971 was non-tribal; the Jharkhand Party had already tried to give its demand a regional character by opening membership to non-tribals, Jaipal Singh and much of the leadership joined the Congress in 1963, and the Jharkhand Mukti Morcha formed in late 1972 with Shibu Soren emerging as its leader recast the demand as a regional one on behalf of the peasants and workers of the region, although the movement never shifted completely from tribal to class-based regional politics because it was built around tribal identity and tribal demands. D. Colonialism brought a radical transformation as the tribals' relative isolation was eroded by the penetration of market forces and by integration into British and princely administrations, and money-lenders, traders, revenue farmers, middlemen and petty officials invaded tribal areas until families were engulfed in debt and lost their land to outsiders, many being reduced to agricultural labourers, sharecroppers and rack-rented tenants while belated legislation against land alienation failed to halt the process.

Answer: C. Explanation: Scheduled Tribes formed 31.15 per cent of the population of Chota Nagpur and 44.67 per cent of the Santhal Parganas in 1951 and 30.94 and 36.22 per cent respectively in 1971, so that nearly two-thirds of Jharkhand's population in 1971 was non-tribal; the Jharkhand Party had already tried to give its demand a regional character by opening membership to non-tribals, Jaipal Singh and much of the leadership joined the Congress in 1963, and the Jharkhand Mukti Morcha formed in late 1972 with Shibu Soren emerging as its leader recast the demand as a regional one on behalf of the peasants and workers of the region, although the movement never shifted completely from tribal to class-based regional politics because it was built around tribal identity and tribal demands. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and prevents cross-matching errors in UPSC elimination.

Q80. Which statement avoids a common matching trap about The demographic turn to a regional demand?

A. To conserve forests and to facilitate their commercial exploitation the colonial authorities brought large tracts under forest laws that forbade shifting cultivation and severely restricted tribal use of the forest and access to its products, and the combination of land loss, indebtedness, exploitation by middlemen and extortion by police and forest officials produced a series of nineteenth- and twentieth-century uprisings including the Santhal uprising and the Munda rebellion led by Birsa Munda, and drew tribal people into the national and peasant movements. B. Two approaches were on offer - leaving the tribal people alone and uncontaminated by outside influences, and assimilating them as completely and quickly as possible into the surrounding society - and Nehru rejected both: he called the first the treatment of tribal people as museum specimens to be observed and written about, which was to insult them and was in any case impossible because penetration had gone too far, and he rejected the second because being engulfed by the masses of Indian humanity would destroy the tribals' social and cultural identity and let unscrupulous outsiders take possession of their land and forests. C. Verrier Elwin, who lived nearly all his life among the tribal people of central and north-eastern India, was one of the formative influences on the new government's policies and recorded that under British rule tribal people suffered oppression and exploitation as merchants and liquor-vendors cajoled, tricked and swindled them until their broad acres dwindled; his influence underwrote a policy of integration without imposition rather than a policy of rescue or of tutelage. D. Scheduled Tribes formed 31.15 per cent of the population of Chota Nagpur and 44.67 per cent of the Santhal Parganas in 1951 and 30.94 and 36.22 per cent respectively in 1971, so that nearly two-thirds of Jharkhand's population in 1971 was non-tribal; the Jharkhand Party had already tried to give its demand a regional character by opening membership to non-tribals, Jaipal Singh and much of the leadership joined the Congress in 1963, and the Jharkhand Mukti Morcha formed in late 1972 with Shibu Soren emerging as its leader recast the demand as a regional one on behalf of the peasants and workers of the region, although the movement never shifted completely from tribal to class-based regional politics because it was built around tribal identity and tribal demands.

Answer: D. Explanation: Scheduled Tribes formed 31.15 per cent of the population of Chota Nagpur and 44.67 per cent of the Santhal Parganas in 1951 and 30.94 and 36.22 per cent respectively in 1971, so that nearly two-thirds of Jharkhand's population in 1971 was non-tribal; the Jharkhand Party had already tried to give its demand a regional character by opening membership to non-tribals, Jaipal Singh and much of the leadership joined the Congress in 1963, and the Jharkhand Mukti Morcha formed in late 1972 with Shibu Soren emerging as its leader recast the demand as a regional one on behalf of the peasants and workers of the region, although the movement never shifted completely from tribal to class-based regional politics because it was built around tribal identity and tribal demands. This distinction preserves the source-backed chronology and

PYQS AND ANSWER PRACTICE

TRANSPARENT ZERO-DIRECT-PYQ AUDIT

No Prelims or Mains demand in the local 2018-2026 routing ledgers is routed to this owner. The tribal demands that do appear belong elsewhere and are not relabelled: 2021 Mains GS-I Q9 and 2022 Mains GS-I Q10 are routed to the Indian Society tribe-and-tribal-society owner, 2023 Mains GS-I Q13 on colonial rule and the tribal response is routed to the Modern History owner on Left, peasant, workers' and states' peoples' movements, and the Fifth and Sixth Schedule Prelims demands of 2019, 2022, 2023, 2024, 2025 and 2026 are routed to the Polity scheduled-and-tribal-areas owner. No option letter, official stem or key is asserted for any of them, and no adjacent Polity, Social Justice, Governance or Indian Society question is presented as a direct Modern History PYQ for this topic.

No adjacent Geography, International Relations, Governance or Polity question is relabelled as a direct Modern History PYQ.

PYQ DEMAND CARD 1 - 2023 Mains GS-I Q13

Demand: Colonial rule and the tribals and the tribal response - How did and What was, 15 marks, 250 words. The local ledger _PYQ-ROUTING-MAINS-GS1-GS2-ESSAY-2018-2023.md routes this demand to the Modern History owner on Left, peasant, workers' and states' peoples' movements, not to this post-Independence owner.

Status: adjacent-owner-routed-demand-not-claimed-here

Model solution / safe handling: This card exists to prevent a false ownership claim. The demand's colonial half belongs to the owning topic, and this owner may legitimately supply only its own background: that colonialism eroded tribal isolation through money-lenders, traders, revenue farmers and middlemen, that forest laws forbade shifting cultivation and restricted access to forest produce, and that the resulting dispossession produced the Santhal uprising and the Munda rebellion led by Birsa Munda and drew tribal people into the national and peasant movements. Anything this owner adds beyond that background must be flagged as post-1947 continuation rather than as an answer to the colonial demand, and no option letter, mark award or official model answer is asserted.

PYQ DEMAND CARD 2 - 2021 Mains GS-I Q9

Demand: Uniqueness of tribal knowledge systems against mainstream systems - Examine, 10 marks, 150 words. The local ledger routes this demand to the Indian Society tribe-and-tribal-society owner and not to this owner.

Status: adjacent-subject-routed-demand-not-claimed-here

Model solution / safe handling: The safe handling is to recognise that this is a society demand about knowledge systems, not a history demand about integration policy. The only defensible contribution from this owner is the policy premise that Nehru's guidelines required development along the lines of the tribals' own genius, that tribal languages should be encouraged and the conditions for their flourishing safeguarded, and that administration should work through the tribals' own social and cultural institutions rather than over-administer them. No sociological classification, ethnographic claim, statistic or scheme is imported here, and no answer letter is asserted.

PYQ DEMAND CARD 3 - 2022 Mains GS-I Q10

Demand: Tribal diversity and treatment as a single category - In which specific contexts, 10 marks, 150 words. The local ledger routes this demand to the Indian Society tribe-and-tribal-society owner and not to this owner.

Status: adjacent-subject-routed-demand-not-claimed-here

Model solution / safe handling: The historical contribution this owner can defensibly make is the demonstration that Indian policy itself refused a single category: over 400 communities on the 1971 Census lived under two distinct constitutional regimes because they were territorially dominant in the North-East and dispersed minorities elsewhere, which is precisely why the Sixth Schedule and the Fifth Schedule exist as separate instruments, and why the Naga, Mizo and Jharkhand trajectories diverged so sharply. That is a design observation, not a sociological typology; the typology belongs to the owning Indian Society topic, and no answer letter is asserted.

ORIGINAL MAINS 1 - 10 MARKS

Question: Explain why Indian tribal policy after 1947 rejected both isolation and assimilation, and state what it put in their place. Answer in about 150 words.

Model thesis: Both alternatives were rejected for stated reasons - isolation was insulting and by then impossible, assimilation would destroy identity and expose land and forest to outsiders - and the replacement was integration on two parameters that had to be held together.

Evidence spine:

- Verrier Elwin, who lived nearly all his life among the tribal people of central and north-eastern India, was one of the formative influences on the new government's policies and recorded that under British rule tribal people suffered oppression and exploitation as merchants and liquor-vendors cajoled, tricked and swindled them until their broad acres dwindled; his influence underwrote a policy of integration without imposition rather than a policy of rescue or of tutelage.
- Two approaches were on offer - leaving the tribal people alone and uncontaminated by outside influences, and assimilating them as completely and quickly as possible into the surrounding society - and Nehru rejected both: he called the first the treatment of tribal people as museum specimens to be observed and written about, which was to insult them and was in any case impossible because penetration had gone too far, and he rejected the second because being engulfed by the masses of Indian humanity would destroy the tribals' social and cultural identity and let unscrupulous outsiders take possession of their land and forests.
- Nehru's alternative was integration: making the tribal people an integral part of the Indian nation while maintaining their distinct identity and culture, on two parameters that had to be held together - the tribal areas have to progress, and they have to progress in their own way - with progress meaning something other than an attempt merely to duplicate what existed elsewhere in India and with whatever changes were needed to be worked out by the tribals themselves.
- Nehru laid down five broad guidelines for government policy: tribal people should develop along the lines of their own genius with no imposition or compulsion from outside and no superiority complex among non-tribals; tribal rights in land and forest should be respected and no outsider should be able to take possession of tribal land; tribal languages should be encouraged and the conditions for their flourishing safeguarded; administration should rely on the tribal people themselves with administrators recruited and trained from among them and as few outsiders as possible; and there should be no over-administration of tribal areas. 'Tribal Panchsheel' is a later label for these guidelines and no exact proclamation may be attached to it.

Balance: Distinguish intention from outcome, identify regional or social variation, and avoid treating a formal measure as complete implementation.

Conclusion: Both alternatives were rejected for stated reasons - isolation was insulting and by then impossible, assimilation would destroy identity and expose land and forest to outsiders - and the replacement was integration on two parameters that had to be held together.

ORIGINAL MAINS 2 - 10 MARKS

Question: Distinguish the constitutional instruments applied to the tribal areas of the North-East from those applied to other Scheduled Areas, and explain what makes the distinction necessary. Answer in about 150 words.

Model thesis: The distinction is demographic before it is legal: self-government is available where a community is territorially dominant, and protective regulation is the only available instrument where it is a dispersed minority.

Evidence spine:

- Except in the North-East the tribal communities constituted minorities in their own home states, and this single demographic asymmetry explains why the republic needed two different constitutional instruments: self-government where a community was territorially dominant, and protective regulation where it was a dispersed minority among non-tribal neighbours.
- The Constitution gave the policy shape by directing under Article 46 that the state promote with special care the educational and economic interests of the tribal people and protect them from social injustice and all forms of exploitation; governors of states containing tribal areas received a special responsibility including the power to modify central and state laws in their application to those areas and to frame regulations protecting tribal land rights and guarding against money-lenders, full political rights were extended, seats in the legislatures and posts in the services were reserved for the Scheduled Tribes, Tribal Advisory Councils were provided for in all states containing tribal areas, and a Commissioner for Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes was appointed by the President to investigate whether the safeguards were being observed.

- The Sixth Schedule applied to the tribal areas of Assam and offered a fair degree of self-government through autonomous districts and district and regional councils exercising some legislative and judicial functions within the jurisdiction of the legislature and Parliament, while the Fifth Schedule together with Tribal Advisory Councils, Article 46 and reservations covered the other Scheduled Areas where tribal communities were dispersed minorities; the two Schedules answer two different demographic problems, they are never interchangeable, and their detailed provisions belong to the Polity owner rather than to this historical one.
- The tribes of north-eastern India, consisting of over a hundred groups speaking a wide variety of languages, differed from tribal communities elsewhere because they formed the overwhelming majority in the areas they inhabited, because British administration had given their areas a separate status inside Assam and excluded plains outsiders from acquiring land, and because they had almost no political or cultural contact with the national movement, so that the common bonds forged in the anti-imperialist struggle had little purchase there and some missionaries and other foreigners even promoted sentiment for separate states immediately after independence.

Balance: Distinguish intention from outcome, identify regional or social variation, and avoid treating a formal measure as complete implementation.

Conclusion: The distinction is demographic before it is legal: self-government is available where a community is territorially dominant, and protective regulation is the only available instrument where it is a dispersed minority.

ORIGINAL MAINS 3 - 15 MARKS

Question: Examine the movement from insurgency to accommodation in the North-East using the Naga and Mizo trajectories, and state carefully what the pattern does not prove. Answer in about 250 words.

Model thesis: Both trajectories run grievance to armed challenge to military containment to negotiated autonomy inside the Union, and the pattern proves that accommodation produced durable settlements in these cases without proving that every North-Eastern conflict was resolved identically.

Evidence spine:

- A section of the Naga leadership opposed integration and rose in rebellion under A.Z. Phizo demanding complete independence, and in 1955 these separatists declared the formation of an independent government and launched a violent insurrection; the Government of India answered on two tracks at once, refusing absolutely to concede secession or to negotiate with those who would not abandon independence and armed rebellion, while simultaneously offering a large degree of cultural and administrative autonomy to moderate, non-violent and non-secessionist Naga leaders.
- The army was sent to Nagaland in early 1956 to restore peace and order, the back of the armed rebellion was broken by the middle of 1957, moderate Naga leaders headed by Dr Imkongliba Ao then came to the fore and negotiated for a state within the Indian union, and through a series of intermediate steps the state of Nagaland came into existence in 1963, after which politics in Nagaland followed the pattern of other states of the union; the sequence is coercion followed by political accommodation, never coercion alone and never accommodation alone.
- Unhappiness with the Assam government's relief measures during the famine of 1959 and the passage of the Act in 1961 making Assamese the official language of the state led to the formation of the Mizo National Front under Laldenga, which contested elections while building a military wing trained and armed from outside; in March 1966 the Front declared independence, proclaimed a military uprising and attacked military and civilian targets, the insurrection was crushed within a few weeks by massive counter-insurgency measures although stray guerrilla activity continued, and in 1973, after less extremist Mizo leaders had scaled the demand down to a separate state within the union, the Mizo district was separated from Assam and given the status of a Union Territory as Mizoram. A settlement was finally arrived at in 1986 under which Laldenga and the Front agreed to abandon underground violent activity, surrender with their arms and re-enter the constitutional political stream while the Government of India granted full statehood with guarantees for culture, tradition and land laws, and a government with Laldenga as chief minister was formed in the new state of Mizoram in February 1987; Mizoram is the model case of an insurgency ending with its leader as elected head of a new state, and it must be presented as the successful case rather than as the universal outcome, because not every North-Eastern conflict was settled on this model and no current security assessment belongs in a historical answer.

- As part of the reorganisation of the North-East in 1972, Meghalaya became a separate state incorporating the Garo, Khasi and Jaintia tribes, the Union Territories of Manipur and Tripura were simultaneously granted statehood, and NEFA was renamed Arunachal Pradesh; the transition to statehood in the cases of Meghalaya, Manipur, Tripura and Arunachal Pradesh was on the owners' account quite smooth, and Arunachal Pradesh itself attained statehood in 1987.

Balance: Distinguish intention from outcome, identify regional or social variation, and avoid treating a formal measure as complete implementation.

Conclusion: Both trajectories run grievance to armed challenge to military containment to negotiated autonomy inside the Union, and the pattern proves that accommodation produced durable settlements in these cases without proving that every North-Eastern conflict was resolved identically.

ORIGINAL MAINS 4 - 15 MARKS

Question: Analyse the evolution of the Jharkhand movement from a tribal demand into a regional one, and assess how complete that conversion was. Answer in about 250 words.

Model thesis: The movement broadened because its own constituency had shrunk to a minority in the territory it claimed, but the conversion remained partial because the movement stayed built around tribal identity and tribal demands.

Evidence spine:

- The Jharkhand Party was founded in 1950 under the leadership of the Oxford-educated Jaipal Singh to demand a separate tribal state incorporating Chota Nagpur and the Santhal Parganas of south Bihar together with contiguous tribal areas of Madhya Pradesh, Orissa and West Bengal; it won 32 seats in the 1952 elections and emerged as the main opposition party in the Bihar Assembly, then fell to 25 seats in 1957 and 20 seats in 1962, and the States Reorganization Commission of 1955 rejected the demand on the ground that the region did not have a common language while the central government held that tribals being a minority there could not claim a state of their own.
- Scheduled Tribes formed 31.15 per cent of the population of Chota Nagpur and 44.67 per cent of the Santhal Parganas in 1951 and 30.94 and 36.22 per cent respectively in 1971, so that nearly two-thirds of Jharkhand's population in 1971 was non-tribal; the Jharkhand Party had already tried to give its demand a regional character by opening membership to non-tribals, Jaipal Singh and much of the leadership joined the Congress in 1963, and the Jharkhand Mukti Morcha formed in late 1972 with Shibu Soren emerging as its leader recast the demand as a regional one on behalf of the peasants and workers of the region, although the movement never shifted completely from tribal to class-based regional politics because it was built around tribal identity and tribal demands.
- In spite of the constitutional safeguards the tribals' progress and welfare was slow and even dismal outside the North-East, because well-intentioned measures were weakly executed, central and state policies diverged, Tribal Advisory Councils did not function effectively, funds allocated for tribal welfare went unspent or were misapplied, laws against transfer of land to outsiders were evaded, the rapid extension of mines and industries displaced communities, deforestation and curtailed forest access destroyed livelihoods, and an emerging tribal elite captured much of what development did occur; the honest verdict is therefore split between political accommodation that succeeded and development that did not.
- The Sixth Schedule applied to the tribal areas of Assam and offered a fair degree of self-government through autonomous districts and district and regional councils exercising some legislative and judicial functions within the jurisdiction of the legislature and Parliament, while the Fifth Schedule together with Tribal Advisory Councils, Article 46 and reservations covered the other Scheduled Areas where tribal communities were dispersed minorities; the two Schedules answer two different demographic problems, they are never interchangeable, and their detailed provisions belong to the Polity owner rather than to this historical one.

Balance: Distinguish intention from outcome, identify regional or social variation, and avoid treating a formal measure as complete implementation.

Conclusion: The movement broadened because its own constituency had shrunk to a minority in the territory it claimed, but the conversion remained partial because the movement stayed built around tribal identity and tribal demands.

ORIGINAL MAINS 5 - 20 MARKS

Question: Critically assess the record of tribal integration between 1947 and 1987, separating political accommodation from developmental delivery. Answer in about 300 words.

Model thesis: The record splits: no tribal region seceded, autonomy and statehood were extended and insurgent leaderships entered constitutional politics, while land alienation, displacement, curtailed forest access and elite capture meant that the promise of progress in their own way was honoured constitutionally more than materially.

Evidence spine:

- Nehru laid down five broad guidelines for government policy: tribal people should develop along the lines of their own genius with no imposition or compulsion from outside and no superiority complex among non-tribals; tribal rights in land and forest should be respected and no outsider should be able to take possession of tribal land; tribal languages should be encouraged and the conditions for their flourishing safeguarded; administration should rely on the tribal people themselves with administrators recruited and trained from among them and as few outsiders as possible; and there should be no over-administration of tribal areas. 'Tribal Panchsheel' is a later label for these guidelines and no exact proclamation year may be attached to it.
- In spite of the constitutional safeguards the tribals' progress and welfare was slow and even dismal outside the North-East, because well-intentioned measures were weakly executed, central and state policies diverged, Tribal Advisory Councils did not function effectively, funds allocated for tribal welfare went unspent or were misapplied, laws against transfer of land to outsiders were evaded, the rapid extension of mines and industries displaced communities, deforestation and curtailed forest access destroyed livelihoods, and an emerging tribal elite captured much of what development did occur; the honest verdict is therefore split between political accommodation that succeeded and development that did not.
- Unhappiness with the Assam government's relief measures during the famine of 1959 and the passage of the Act in 1961 making Assamese the official language of the state led to the formation of the Mizo National Front under Laldenga, which contested elections while building a military wing trained and armed from outside; in March 1966 the Front declared independence, proclaimed a military uprising and attacked military and civilian targets, the insurrection was crushed within a few weeks by massive counter-insurgency measures although stray guerrilla activity continued, and in 1973, after less extremist Mizo leaders had scaled the demand down to a separate state within the union, the Mizo district was separated from Assam and given the status of a Union Territory as Mizoram. A settlement was finally arrived at in 1986 under which Laldenga and the Front agreed to abandon underground violent activity, surrender with their arms and re-enter the constitutional political stream while the Government of India granted full statehood with guarantees for culture, tradition and land laws, and a government with Laldenga as chief minister was formed in the new state of Mizoram in February 1987; Mizoram is the model case of an insurgency ending with its leader as elected head of a new state, and it must be presented as the successful case rather than as the universal outcome, because not every North-Eastern conflict was settled on this model and no current security assessment belongs in a historical answer.
- The 1971 Census recorded over 400 tribal communities numbering nearly 38 million people and constituting nearly 6.9 per cent of the Indian population, with the greatest concentrations in Madhya Pradesh, Bihar, Orissa, north-eastern India, West Bengal, Maharashtra, Gujarat and Rajasthan; these figures must always carry the 1971 Census attribution and must never be presented as 1951 figures or as current data, and no contemporary tribal statistic may be substituted for them.

Balance: Distinguish intention from outcome, identify regional or social variation, and avoid treating a formal measure as complete implementation.

Conclusion: The record splits: no tribal region seceded, autonomy and statehood were extended and insurgent leaderships entered constitutional politics, while land alienation, displacement, curtailed forest access and elite capture meant that the promise of progress in their own way was honoured constitutionally more than materially.

ORIGINAL MAINS 6 - 20 MARKS

Question: Assess why the North-East required a distinct integration strategy, and evaluate how far the strategy adopted answered that distinctiveness. Answer in about 300 words.

Model thesis: The North-East was distinct in demography, in colonial administrative history and in its detachment from the national movement, and the strategy answered that distinctiveness with autonomy, reorganisation and statehood rather than with the linguistic template applied elsewhere, although the settlements arrived only after long periods of militarised administration.

Evidence spine:

- The tribes of north-eastern India, consisting of over a hundred groups speaking a wide variety of languages, differed from tribal communities elsewhere because they formed the overwhelming majority in the areas they inhabited, because British administration had given their areas a separate status inside Assam and excluded plains outsiders from acquiring land, and because they had almost no political or cultural contact with the national movement, so that the common bonds forged in the anti-imperialist struggle had little purchase there and some missionaries and other foreigners even promoted sentiment for separate states immediately after independence.
- The North-East Frontier Agency was created in 1948 out of the border areas of Assam as a Union Territory outside the jurisdiction of Assam and placed under a special administration manned by a specially recruited cadre asked to implement development without disturbing the social and cultural pattern of life, and it was there that the Nehru-Elwin policy was implemented best; the objective of the Sixth Schedule was likewise to enable tribal people to live according to their own ways, with the Government of India willing to amend the provisions further to promote autonomy while refusing to countenance secession or violence.
- Resentment against the Assam government mounted among the hill tribes, who feared assimilation by what they saw as a policy of Assamization, and the demand for a separate hill state gained decisive strength when Assamese leaders moved in 1960 to make Assamese the sole official language of the state; the hill parties merged into the All Party Hill Leaders Conference in 1960, the Assam Official Language Act provoked hartals, demonstrations and a major agitation, the advocates of a separate state won overwhelmingly in the tribal areas in the 1962 elections and boycotted the Assembly, and in 1969 a constitutional amendment carved out Meghalaya as a state within a state with complete autonomy except for law and order.
- As part of the reorganisation of the North-East in 1972, Meghalaya became a separate state incorporating the Garo, Khasi and Jaintia tribes, the Union Territories of Manipur and Tripura were simultaneously granted statehood, and NEFA was renamed Arunachal Pradesh; the transition to statehood in the cases of Meghalaya, Manipur, Tripura and Arunachal Pradesh was on the owners' account quite smooth, and Arunachal Pradesh itself attained statehood in 1987.

Balance: Distinguish intention from outcome, identify regional or social variation, and avoid treating a formal measure as complete implementation.

Conclusion: The North-East was distinct in demography, in colonial administrative history and in its detachment from the national movement, and the strategy answered that distinctiveness with autonomy, reorganisation and statehood rather than with the linguistic template applied elsewhere, although the settlements arrived only after long periods of militarised administration.