Practice question (not a PYQ): Assess the role of the Objectives Resolution in constitution-making.

STATIC THEORY

- Claim: It supplied a normative framework before the machinery was finalised.
- Evidence: Nehru moved it on 13 Dec 1946; adoption on 22 Jan 1947; popular authority, justice, equality, freedoms and safeguards were stated.
- Significance: Committees drafted within an agreed value horizon; its modified form became the Preamble.
- Qualification: The Resolution was not the final constitutional text and later doctrine belongs to the Preamble owner.
- Verdict: It was the value bridge from nationalist aspiration to constitutional identity.
- Why this earns marks: precise chronology, named content, causal significance and a boundary.

Practice question (not a PYQ): Differentiate B.N. Rau's role from that of the Drafting Committee.

STATIC THEORY

- Claim: Rau prepared comparative advice and an initial adviser draft; the Committee converted decisions into the Draft Constitution.
- Evidence: Rau was Constitutional Adviser; the seven-member Committee was appointed 29 Aug 1947 under Ambedkar.
- Significance: Research, drafting and adoption were institutionally separated.
- Qualification: Neither Rau nor the Committee could substitute for plenary amendment and adoption.
- Verdict: Rau widened and organised choices; the Committee legally integrated them.
- Why this earns marks: direct comparison with precise role boundaries.

Practice question (not a PYQ): Critically examine the Congress-dominated character of the Assembly.

STATIC THEORY

- Question (15 marks): Critically examine Congress dominance in the Constituent Assembly.
- Direct thesis: Congress dominance was numerically decisive and organisationally useful, but not identical to ideological uniformity or total exclusion.
- Claim -> named evidence -> significance: Congress won 208 of 296 seats in the 1946 election frame, proving agenda and voting dominance.
- Claim -> named evidence -> significance: Its umbrella contained socialists, Gandhians, liberals, conservatives and provincial interests, requiring internal negotiation.
- Claim -> named evidence -> significance: Non-Congress experts and minority/women members participated; committees and plenary amendments created channels beyond a simple party caucus.
- Claim -> named evidence -> significance: The League boycott and Partition altered the balance, explaining but not eliminating post-Partition imbalance.
- Limitation/qualification: Indirect election, limited franchise and party control constrained the depth of representation.
- Conclusion: Congress dominance should be treated as both a coordination asset and a democratic limitation.
- Why this earns marks: It answers the directive, uses named institutional evidence, explains what each fact proves, preserves a qualification and ends with a graded verdict.

Practice question (not a PYQ): Explain how committee government strengthened constitution-making.

STATIC THEORY

- Question (15 marks): Explain how committee government strengthened Indian constitution-making.
- Direct thesis: Committees converted a vast, conflict-ridden agenda into specialised, negotiable and legally draftable units.
- Claim -> named evidence -> significance: Nehru's Union committees framed central architecture.
- Claim -> named evidence -> significance: Patel's Provincial and Advisory Committees linked federal design with rights/minority/tribal channels.
- Claim -> named evidence -> significance: Kripalani, Mukherjee, Bardoloi and Thakkar subcommittees deepened issue-specific scrutiny.
- Claim -> named evidence -> significance: Ambedkar's Drafting Committee integrated reports and Rau's advice before plenary readings.
- Limitation/qualification: Committee work could be technocratic and partly opaque; plenary debate was essential for authorisation.
- Conclusion: The strength lay in specialisation joined to, not replacing, Assembly control.
- Why this earns marks: It answers the directive, uses named institutional evidence, explains what each fact proves, preserves a qualification and ends with a graded verdict.

Practice question (not a PYQ): Constitution-making represented continuity and rupture. Discuss.

STATIC THEORY

- Question (20 marks): Constitution-making represented both continuity and rupture. Discuss.
- Direct thesis: The Constitution retained machinery necessary for governability while replacing colonial legitimacy with republican popular sovereignty and social-democratic commitments.
- Claim -> named evidence -> significance: 1935 Act-derived offices, lists, services and legal techniques supplied administrative continuity.
- Claim -> named evidence -> significance: Parliamentary responsibility and a written supreme Constitution changed accountability.
- Claim -> named evidence -> significance: Universal adult franchise created mass political equality absent from the Assembly's own indirect electorate.
- Claim -> named evidence -> significance: Fundamental Rights and judicial review constrained state power; DPSP directed social transformation.
- Claim -> named evidence -> significance: A strong Union and emergency devices continued centralising state capacity, shaped by Partition/integration.
- Claim -> named evidence -> significance: Article 394-395 managed legal transition through staged commencement and repeal.
- Limitation/qualification: Inherited institutions carried colonial and centralising risks; constitutional promises did not instantly transform social relations.
- Conclusion: The founding achievement was controlled rupture: enough continuity to govern, enough transformation to democratise authority.
- Why this earns marks: It answers the directive, uses named institutional evidence, explains what each fact proves, preserves a qualification and ends with a graded verdict.

Practice question (not a PYQ): Evaluate the legitimacy of the Constituent Assembly.

STATIC THEORY

- Question (20 marks): Evaluate the legitimacy of the Constituent Assembly.
- Direct thesis: Its legitimacy was neither a pure electoral mandate nor a British gift; it was progressively built through sovereignty, plural deliberation and democratic constitutional output.
- Claim -> named evidence -> significance: Cabinet Mission selection was indirect and partly nominated, establishing an origin deficit.
- Claim -> named evidence -> significance: Congress 208/296 and League boycott establish dominance and absence.
- Claim -> named evidence -> significance: Indian Independence Act 1947 removed the external sovereignty objection.
- Claim -> named evidence -> significance: Committees, subcommittees, women and marginalised members created deliberative channels.
- Claim -> named evidence -> significance: Three readings and amendments supplied public institutional authorisation.
- Claim -> named evidence -> significance: Universal adult franchise and popular sovereignty democratised the order prospectively.
- Limitation/qualification: Princely nomination, restricted franchise, social imbalance and post-Partition composition remain irreducible limits.
- Conclusion: The Assembly earned qualified founding legitimacy by creating a more democratic polity than the body that created it.
- Why this earns marks: It answers the directive, uses named institutional evidence, explains what each fact proves, preserves a qualification and ends with a graded verdict.
