

SOLVED PRACTICE WORKBOOK

Transgender Persons and Denotified/Nomadic Communities - Learner-v2 Refreshed

UPSC complete learning session | Foundation to advanced | Concepts, evidence, practice and answer writing

Original deterministic study visual; labels are explanatory, not textual quotations.

Source order: repository knowledge -> official current linkage -> clearly marked analysis. No fabricated PYQs or statistics.

CONTENTS / WORKBOOK INDEX

Major learning parts and meaningful subtopics are listed in document order. Page numbers are generated from the final PDF layout; PDF bookmarks mirror the same hierarchy.

Transgender Persons and Denotified/Nomadic Communities - Solved Practice Workbook 6

BASIC MCQS / REMEDIATION 6

Q1. Which statement correctly identifies What this owner holds and how its previous-year record is stated?	6
Q2. Which chronology card should be filed under What this owner holds and how its previous-year record is stated?	7
Q3. Which option preserves the source-bounded meaning of What this owner holds and how its previous-year record is stated?	7
Q4. Which statement avoids a close-option trap about What this owner holds and how its previous-year record is stated?	8
Q5. Which statement correctly identifies Who is a transgender person under the 2019 Act?	9
Q6. Which chronology card should be filed under Who is a transgender person under the 2019 Act?	9
Q7. Which option preserves the source-bounded meaning of Who is a transgender person under the 2019 Act?	10
Q8. Which statement avoids a close-option trap about Who is a transgender person under the 2019 Act?	11
Q9. Which statement correctly identifies The certificate of identity and its two distinct routes?	11
Q10. Which chronology card should be filed under The certificate of identity and its two distinct routes?	12
Q11. Which option preserves the source-bounded meaning of The certificate of identity and its two distinct routes?	13
Q12. Which statement avoids a close-option trap about The certificate of identity and its two distinct routes?	13
Q13. Which statement correctly identifies NALSA v. Union of India and what the Court directed?	14
Q14. Which chronology card should be filed under NALSA v. Union of India and what the Court directed?	15
Q15. Which option preserves the source-bounded meaning of NALSA v. Union of India and what the Court directed?	15
Q16. Which statement avoids a close-option trap about NALSA v. Union of India and what the Court directed?	16
Q17. Which statement correctly identifies How a judgment differs from the statute that followed?	17
Q18. Which chronology card should be filed under How a judgment differs from the statute that followed?	17
Q19. Which option preserves the source-bounded meaning of How a judgment differs from the statute that followed?	18
Q20. Which statement avoids a close-option trap about How a judgment differs from the statute that followed?	18
Q21. Which statement correctly identifies The anti-discrimination provision and the machinery behind it?	19
Q22. Which chronology card should be filed under The anti-discrimination provision and the machinery behind it?	20
Q23. Which option preserves the source-bounded meaning of The anti-discrimination provision and the machinery behind it?	20
Q24. Which statement avoids a close-option trap about The anti-discrimination provision and the machinery behind it?	21
Q25. Which statement correctly identifies The National Council for Transgender Persons and its powers?	22
Q26. Which chronology card should be filed under The National Council for Transgender Persons and its powers?	22

Q27. Which option preserves the source-bounded meaning of The National Council for Transgender Persons and its powers?	23
Q28. Which statement avoids a close-option trap about The National Council for Transgender Persons and its powers?	23
Q29. Which statement correctly identifies SMILE and the two sub-schemes it actually carries?	24
Q30. Which chronology card should be filed under SMILE and the two sub-schemes it actually carries?	25
Q31. Which option preserves the source-bounded meaning of SMILE and the two sub-schemes it actually carries?	25
Q32. Which statement avoids a close-option trap about SMILE and the two sub-schemes it actually carries?	26
Q33. Which statement correctly identifies Garima Greh and the limit of a shelter?	26
Q34. Which chronology card should be filed under Garima Greh and the limit of a shelter?	27
Q35. Which option preserves the source-bounded meaning of Garima Greh and the limit of a shelter?	28
Q36. Which statement avoids a close-option trap about Garima Greh and the limit of a shelter?	28
Q37. Which statement correctly identifies The certificate bottleneck at the point of application?	29
Q38. Which chronology card should be filed under The certificate bottleneck at the point of application?	29
Q39. Which option preserves the source-bounded meaning of The certificate bottleneck at the point of application?	30
Q40. Which statement avoids a close-option trap about The certificate bottleneck at the point of application?	31
Q41. Which statement correctly identifies Where the enforcement gap actually sits?	31
Q42. Which chronology card should be filed under Where the enforcement gap actually sits?	32
Q43. Which option preserves the source-bounded meaning of Where the enforcement gap actually sits?	32
Q44. Which statement avoids a close-option trap about Where the enforcement gap actually sits?	33
Q45. Which statement correctly identifies The Criminal Tribes Act of 1871 and what it did?	34
Q46. Which chronology card should be filed under The Criminal Tribes Act of 1871 and what it did?	34
Q47. Which option preserves the source-bounded meaning of The Criminal Tribes Act of 1871 and what it did?	35
Q48. Which statement avoids a close-option trap about The Criminal Tribes Act of 1871 and what it did?	35
Q49. Which statement correctly identifies Why denotified does not mean decriminalised?	36
Q50. Which chronology card should be filed under Why denotified does not mean decriminalised?	37
Q51. Which option preserves the source-bounded meaning of Why denotified does not mean decriminalised?	37
Q52. Which statement avoids a close-option trap about Why denotified does not mean decriminalised?	38
Q53. Which statement correctly identifies Who the DNT, NT and SNT communities are and the counting caution?	39
Q54. Which chronology card should be filed under Who the DNT, NT and SNT communities are and the counting caution?	39
Q55. Which option preserves the source-bounded meaning of Who the DNT, NT and SNT communities are and the counting caution?	40
Q56. Which statement avoids a close-option trap about Who the DNT, NT and SNT communities are and the counting caution?	41

Q57. Which statement correctly identifies Renke and Idate as the named diagnostic record?	41
Q58. Which chronology card should be filed under Renke and Idate as the named diagnostic record?	42
Q59. Which option preserves the source-bounded meaning of Renke and Idate as the named diagnostic record?	43
Q60. Which statement avoids a close-option trap about Renke and Idate as the named diagnostic record?	44
Q61. Which statement correctly identifies The Development and Welfare Board and what it cannot do?	44
Q62. Which chronology card should be filed under The Development and Welfare Board and what it cannot do?	45
Q63. Which option preserves the source-bounded meaning of The Development and Welfare Board and what it cannot do?	46
Q64. Which statement avoids a close-option trap about The Development and Welfare Board and what it cannot do?	47
Q65. Which statement correctly identifies SEED and the components the owners actually record?	47
Q66. Which chronology card should be filed under SEED and the components the owners actually record?	48
Q67. Which option preserves the source-bounded meaning of SEED and the components the owners actually record?	49
Q68. Which statement avoids a close-option trap about SEED and the components the owners actually record?	50
Q69. Which statement correctly identifies The documentation barrier that a dedicated scheme cannot remove?	50
Q70. Which chronology card should be filed under The documentation barrier that a dedicated scheme cannot remove?	51
Q71. Which option preserves the source-bounded meaning of The documentation barrier that a dedicated scheme cannot remove?	52
Q72. Which statement avoids a close-option trap about The documentation barrier that a dedicated scheme cannot remove?	53
Q73. Which statement correctly identifies The trade-offs the owners state against their own remedies?	53
Q74. Which chronology card should be filed under The trade-offs the owners state against their own remedies?	54
Q75. Which option preserves the source-bounded meaning of The trade-offs the owners state against their own remedies?	55
Q76. Which statement avoids a close-option trap about The trade-offs the owners state against their own remedies?	56
Q77. Which statement correctly identifies How the previous-year record is stated for this owner?	56
Q78. Which chronology card should be filed under How the previous-year record is stated for this owner?	57
Q79. Which option preserves the source-bounded meaning of How the previous-year record is stated for this owner?	58
Q80. Which statement avoids a close-option trap about How the previous-year record is stated for this owner?	59

PYQS AND ANSWER PRACTICE 59

TRANSPARENT ZERO-DIRECT-PYQ AUDIT	59
OWNER PYQ LEDGER EXTRACTS	60
ORIGINAL MAINS 1 - 10 MARKS	60
ORIGINAL MAINS 2 - 10 MARKS	61
ORIGINAL MAINS 3 - 15 MARKS	62

ORIGINAL MAINS 4 - 15 MARKS 64

ORIGINAL MAINS 5 - 20 MARKS 65

ORIGINAL MAINS 6 - 20 MARKS 67

Transgender Persons and Denotified/Nomadic Communities - Solved Practice Workbook

BASIC MCQS / REMEDIATION

Q1. Which statement correctly identifies What this owner holds and how its previous-year record is stated?

A. This owner holds two distinct populations that the repository joins by one analytical thread rather than by one identity: transgender persons, whose claim is recognition of a self-perceived gender, and Denotified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic communities, whose claim is release from a colonial criminal label and entry into the documentation on which welfare depends; the owners state the shared structure as recognise identity, then prohibit discrimination, then deliver welfare, and they warn against homogenising the two groups because a transgender person can be socially visible while legally marginalised whereas a nomadic family can be administratively invisible because classifications, documents and State lists are fragmented. The audited routing ledgers route no General Studies Mains demand and no objective demand to this owner, so the package solves none and says so plainly instead of inventing one. B. The owners record NALSA v. Union of India, decided by the Supreme Court in 2014, as the judgment recognising transgender persons' right to a self-identified gender under Articles 14, 15 and 21, directing welfare measures and directing that the government treat transgender persons as socially and educationally backward and consider extending backward-class benefits; the owners also record, as an advanced point, that the 2019 Act did not fully adopt that direction, and they instruct that no uniform national horizontal-reservation rule be invented, because the status of such claims remains a State and litigation question rather than a settled statutory entitlement. C. The owners keep two certification routes apart. A District Magistrate issues the basic certificate recognising a person's self-perceived transgender identity, and no medical or surgical requirement applies to it. Section 7 separately permits a revised male or female certificate after medical intervention, which is an additional route and not a precondition for basic recognition. The distinction is the single most tested detail in this half of the topic, because an answer that says the Act requires surgery for recognition inverts the statutory scheme, and an answer that ignores Section 7 loses the reason critics describe the design as certificate-based rather than self-declaratory. D. The Transgender Persons (Protection of Rights) Act, 2019, with Rules notified in 2020, defines a transgender person as a person whose gender does not match the gender assigned at birth, and the owners record that the definition expressly includes trans-men, trans-women, persons with intersex variations, genderqueer persons and persons with socio-cultural identities such as kinnar, hijra, aravani and jogta; the examinable point is that the statute uses an inclusive enumeration rather than a single medicalised test, so an answer that reduces the category to one community or to a surgical status has narrowed the definition Parliament actually enacted.

Answer: A. Explanation: This owner holds two distinct populations that the repository joins by one analytical thread rather than by one identity: transgender persons, whose claim is recognition of a self-perceived gender, and Denotified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic communities, whose claim is release from a colonial criminal label and entry into the documentation on which welfare depends; the owners state the shared structure as recognise identity, then prohibit discrimination, then deliver welfare, and they warn against homogenising the two groups because a transgender person can be socially visible while legally marginalised whereas a nomadic family can be administratively invisible because classifications, documents and State lists are fragmented. The audited routing ledgers route no General Studies Mains demand and no objective demand to this owner, so the package solves none and says so plainly instead of inventing one. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q2. Which chronology card should be filed under What this owner holds and how its previous-year record is stated?

A. The owners insist on separating legal authorities that answers routinely blur. NALSA is a judicial directive resting on constitutional articles, broader in principle and including the backward-class consideration; the 2019 Act is Parliament's statutory response, narrower and more procedural, supplying a certificate mechanism, specific prohibitions and named institutions. They differ in legal authority, in scope and in the way each is enforced, so an answer that treats a court direction and an enacted section as interchangeable has confused the source of the obligation it is asserting. B. This owner holds two distinct populations that the repository joins by one analytical thread rather than by one identity: transgender persons, whose claim is recognition of a self-perceived gender, and Denotified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic communities, whose claim is release from a colonial criminal label and entry into the documentation on which welfare depends; the owners state the shared structure as recognise identity, then prohibit discrimination, then deliver welfare, and they warn against homogenising the two groups because a transgender person can be socially visible while legally marginalised whereas a nomadic family can be administratively invisible because classifications, documents and State lists are fragmented. The audited routing ledgers route no General Studies Mains demand and no objective demand to this owner, so the package solves none and says so plainly instead of inventing one. C. The owners record NALSA v. Union of India, decided by the Supreme Court in 2014, as the judgment recognising transgender persons' right to a self-identified gender under Articles 14, 15 and 21, directing welfare measures and directing that the government treat transgender persons as socially and educationally backward and consider extending backward-class benefits; the owners also record, as an advanced point, that the 2019 Act did not fully adopt that direction, and they instruct that no uniform national horizontal-reservation rule be invented, because the status of such claims remains a State and litigation question rather than a settled statutory entitlement. D. The owners keep two certification routes apart. A District Magistrate issues the basic certificate recognising a person's self-perceived transgender identity, and no medical or surgical requirement applies to it. Section 7 separately permits a revised male or female certificate after medical intervention, which is an additional route and not a precondition for basic recognition. The distinction is the single most tested detail in this half of the topic, because an answer that says the Act requires surgery for recognition inverts the statutory scheme, and an answer that ignores Section 7 loses the reason critics describe the design as certificate-based rather than self-declaratory.

Answer: B. Explanation: This owner holds two distinct populations that the repository joins by one analytical thread rather than by one identity: transgender persons, whose claim is recognition of a self-perceived gender, and Denotified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic communities, whose claim is release from a colonial criminal label and entry into the documentation on which welfare depends; the owners state the shared structure as recognise identity, then prohibit discrimination, then deliver welfare, and they warn against homogenising the two groups because a transgender person can be socially visible while legally marginalised whereas a nomadic family can be administratively invisible because classifications, documents and State lists are fragmented. The audited routing ledgers route no General Studies Mains demand and no objective demand to this owner, so the package solves none and says so plainly instead of inventing one. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q3. Which option preserves the source-bounded meaning of What this owner holds and how its previous-year record is stated?

A. The owners record that the 2019 Act prohibits discrimination against a transgender person in education, employment, healthcare, access to goods, facilities and public services, and the right to reside with family, and that it creates offences for specific harms including sexual abuse, denial of access to a public place and eviction; they record that an establishment must designate a complaint officer to deal with complaints. They then attach the qualification that a formal complaint route is not the same as accessible enforcement, because awareness, independence and effective remedy remain weak, which is why Section 3 is a starting point for an answer rather than its conclusion. B. The owners record NALSA v. Union of India, decided by the Supreme Court in 2014, as the judgment recognising transgender persons' right to a self-identified gender under Articles 14, 15 and 21, directing welfare measures and directing that the government treat transgender persons as socially and educationally backward and consider extending backward-class benefits; the owners also record, as an advanced point, that the 2019 Act did not fully adopt that direction, and they instruct that no uniform national horizontal-reservation rule be invented, because the status of such claims remains a State and litigation question rather than a settled statutory entitlement. C. This owner holds two distinct populations that the repository joins by one analytical thread rather than by one identity: transgender persons, whose claim is recognition of a self-perceived gender, and Denotified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic communities, whose claim is release from a colonial criminal label and entry into the documentation on which welfare depends; the owners state the shared structure as recognise identity, then prohibit discrimination, then deliver welfare, and they warn against homogenising the two groups because a transgender person can be socially visible while legally marginalised whereas a nomadic family can be administratively invisible because classifications, documents and State lists are fragmented. The audited routing ledgers route no General Studies Mains demand and no objective demand to this owner, so the package solves none and says so plainly instead of inventing one. D. The owners insist on separating legal authorities that answers routinely blur. NALSA is a judicial directive resting on constitutional articles, broader in principle and including the backward-class consideration; the 2019 Act is Parliament's statutory response, narrower and more procedural, supplying a certificate mechanism, specific prohibitions and named institutions. They differ in legal authority, in scope and in the way each is enforced, so an answer that treats a court direction and an enacted section as interchangeable has confused the source of the obligation it is asserting.

Answer: C. Explanation: This owner holds two distinct populations that the repository joins by one analytical thread rather than by one identity: transgender persons, whose claim is recognition of a self-perceived gender, and Denotified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic communities, whose claim is release from a colonial criminal label and entry into the documentation on which welfare depends; the owners state the shared structure as recognise identity, then prohibit discrimination, then deliver welfare, and they warn against homogenising the two groups because a transgender person can be socially visible while legally marginalised whereas a nomadic family can be administratively invisible because classifications, documents and State lists are fragmented. The audited routing ledgers route no General Studies Mains demand and no objective demand to this owner, so the package solves none and says so plainly instead of inventing one. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q4. Which statement avoids a close-option trap about What this owner holds and how its previous-year record is stated?

A. The owners insist on separating legal authorities that answers routinely blur. NALSA is a judicial directive resting on constitutional articles, broader in principle and including the backward-class consideration; the 2019 Act is Parliament's statutory response, narrower and more procedural, supplying a certificate mechanism, specific prohibitions and named institutions. They differ in legal authority, in scope and in the way each is enforced, so an answer that treats a court direction and an enacted section as interchangeable has confused the source of the obligation it is asserting. B. The owners record that the 2019 Act prohibits discrimination against a transgender person in education, employment, healthcare, access to goods, facilities and public services, and the right to reside with family, and that it creates offences for specific harms including sexual abuse, denial of access to a public place and eviction; they record that an establishment must designate a complaint officer to deal with complaints. They then attach the qualification that a formal complaint route is not the same as accessible enforcement, because awareness, independence and effective remedy remain weak, which is why Section 3 is a starting point for an answer rather than its conclusion. C. The owners record the National Council for Transgender Persons as the body created under the 2019 Act, chaired by the Union Minister for Social Justice and Empowerment and including transgender community representatives, State nominees and ministry officials; they record its function as advisory and record expressly that it lacks quasi-judicial or enforcement powers. The examinable contrast is with a commission that can receive complaints, hold inquiries and issue binding directions, and the owners use that contrast to explain why declaration-stage recognition can coexist with delivery-stage failure. D. This owner holds two distinct populations that the repository joins by one analytical thread rather than by one identity: transgender persons, whose claim is recognition of a self-perceived gender, and Denotified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic communities, whose claim is release from a colonial criminal label and entry into the documentation on which welfare depends; the owners state the shared structure as recognise identity, then prohibit discrimination, then deliver welfare, and they warn against homogenising the two groups because a transgender person can be socially visible while legally marginalised whereas a nomadic family can be administratively invisible because classifications, documents and State lists are fragmented. The audited routing ledgers route no General Studies Mains demand and no objective demand to this owner, so the package solves none and says so plainly instead of inventing one.

Answer: D. Explanation: This owner holds two distinct populations that the repository joins by one analytical thread rather than by one identity: transgender persons, whose claim is recognition of a self-perceived gender, and Denotified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic communities, whose claim is release from a colonial criminal label and entry into the documentation on which welfare depends; the owners state the shared structure as recognise identity, then prohibit discrimination, then deliver welfare, and they warn against homogenising the two groups because a transgender person can be socially visible while legally marginalised whereas a nomadic family can be administratively invisible because classifications, documents and State lists are fragmented. The audited routing ledgers route no General Studies Mains demand and no objective demand to this owner, so the package solves none and says so plainly instead of inventing one. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q5. Which statement correctly identifies Who is a transgender person under the 2019 Act?

A. The Transgender Persons (Protection of Rights) Act, 2019, with Rules notified in 2020, defines a transgender person as a person whose gender does not match the gender assigned at birth, and the owners record that the definition expressly includes trans-men, trans-women, persons with intersex variations, genderqueer persons and persons with socio-cultural identities such as kinnar, hijra, aravani and jogta; the examinable point is that the statute uses an inclusive enumeration rather than a single medicalised test, so an answer that reduces the category to one community or to a surgical status has narrowed the definition Parliament actually enacted. B. The owners keep two certification routes apart. A District Magistrate issues the basic certificate recognising a person's self-perceived transgender identity, and no medical or surgical requirement applies to it. Section 7 separately permits a revised male or female certificate after medical intervention, which is an additional route and not a precondition for basic recognition. The distinction is the single most tested detail in this half of the topic, because an answer that says the Act requires surgery for recognition inverts the statutory scheme, and an answer that ignores Section 7 loses the reason critics describe the design as certificate-based rather than self-declaratory. C. The owners record NALSA v. Union of India, decided by the Supreme Court in 2014, as the judgment recognising transgender persons' right to a self-identified gender under Articles 14, 15 and 21, directing welfare measures and directing that the government treat transgender persons as socially and educationally backward and consider extending backward-class benefits; the owners also record, as an advanced point, that the 2019 Act did not fully adopt that direction, and they instruct that no uniform national horizontal-reservation rule be invented, because the status of such claims remains a State and litigation question rather than a settled statutory entitlement. D. The owners insist on separating legal authorities that answers routinely blur. NALSA is a judicial directive resting on constitutional articles, broader in principle and including the backward-class consideration; the 2019 Act is Parliament's statutory response, narrower and more procedural, supplying a certificate mechanism, specific prohibitions and named institutions. They differ in legal authority, in scope and in the way each is enforced, so an answer that treats a court direction and an enacted section as interchangeable has confused the source of the obligation it is asserting.

Answer: A. Explanation: The Transgender Persons (Protection of Rights) Act, 2019, with Rules notified in 2020, defines a transgender person as a person whose gender does not match the gender assigned at birth, and the owners record that the definition expressly includes trans-men, trans-women, persons with intersex variations, genderqueer persons and persons with socio-cultural identities such as kinnar, hijra, aravani and jogta; the examinable point is that the statute uses an inclusive enumeration rather than a single medicalised test, so an answer that reduces the category to one community or to a surgical status has narrowed the definition Parliament actually enacted. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q6. Which chronology card should be filed under Who is a transgender person under the 2019 Act?

A. The owners insist on separating legal authorities that answers routinely blur. NALSA is a judicial directive resting on constitutional articles, broader in principle and including the backward-class consideration; the 2019 Act is Parliament's statutory response, narrower and more procedural, supplying a certificate mechanism, specific prohibitions and named institutions. They differ in legal authority, in scope and in the way each is enforced, so an answer that treats a court direction and an enacted section as interchangeable has confused the source of the obligation it is asserting. B. The Transgender Persons (Protection of Rights) Act, 2019, with Rules notified in 2020, defines a transgender person as a person whose gender does not match the gender assigned at birth, and the owners record that the definition expressly includes trans-men, trans-women, persons with intersex variations, genderqueer persons and persons with socio-cultural identities such as kinnar, hijra, aravani and jogta; the examinable point is that the statute uses an inclusive enumeration rather than a single medicalised test, so an answer that reduces the category to one community or to a surgical status has narrowed the definition Parliament actually enacted. C. The owners record NALSA v. Union of India, decided by the Supreme Court in 2014, as the judgment recognising transgender persons' right to a self-identified gender under Articles 14, 15 and 21, directing welfare measures and directing that the government treat transgender persons as socially and educationally backward and consider extending backward-class benefits; the owners also record, as an advanced point, that the 2019 Act did not fully adopt that direction, and they instruct that no uniform national horizontal-reservation rule be invented, because the status of such claims remains a State and litigation question rather than a settled statutory entitlement. D. The owners record that the 2019 Act prohibits discrimination against a transgender person in education, employment, healthcare, access to goods, facilities and public services, and the right to reside with family, and that it creates offences for specific harms including sexual abuse, denial of access to a public place and eviction; they record that an establishment must designate a complaint officer to deal with complaints. They then attach the qualification that a formal complaint route is not the same as accessible enforcement, because awareness, independence and effective remedy remain weak, which is why Section 3 is a starting point for an answer rather than its conclusion.

Answer: B. Explanation: The Transgender Persons (Protection of Rights) Act, 2019, with Rules notified in 2020, defines a transgender person as a person whose gender does not match the gender assigned at birth, and the owners record that the definition expressly includes trans-men, trans-women, persons with intersex variations, genderqueer persons and persons with socio-cultural identities such as kinnar, hijra, aravani and jogta; the examinable point is that the statute uses an inclusive enumeration rather than a single medicalised test, so an answer that reduces the category to one community or to a surgical status has narrowed the definition Parliament actually enacted. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q7. Which option preserves the source-bounded meaning of Who is a transgender person under the 2019 Act?

A. The owners record that the 2019 Act prohibits discrimination against a transgender person in education, employment, healthcare, access to goods, facilities and public services, and the right to reside with family, and that it creates offences for specific harms including sexual abuse, denial of access to a public place and eviction; they record that an establishment must designate a complaint officer to deal with complaints. They then attach the qualification that a formal complaint route is not the same as accessible enforcement, because awareness, independence and effective remedy remain weak, which is why Section 3 is a starting point for an answer rather than its conclusion. B. The owners insist on separating legal authorities that answers routinely blur. NALSA is a judicial directive resting on constitutional articles, broader in principle and including the backward-class consideration; the 2019 Act is Parliament's statutory response, narrower and more procedural, supplying a certificate mechanism, specific prohibitions and named institutions. They differ in legal authority, in scope and in the way each is enforced, so an answer that treats a court direction and an enacted section as interchangeable has confused the source of the obligation it is asserting. C. The Transgender Persons (Protection of Rights) Act, 2019, with Rules notified in 2020, defines a transgender person as a person whose gender does not match the gender assigned at birth, and the owners record that the definition expressly includes trans-men, trans-women, persons with intersex variations, genderqueer persons and persons with socio-cultural identities such as kinnar, hijra, aravani and jogta; the examinable point is that the statute uses an inclusive enumeration rather than a single medicalised test, so an answer that reduces the category to one community or to a surgical status has narrowed the definition Parliament actually enacted. D. The owners record the National Council for Transgender Persons as the body created under the 2019 Act, chaired by the Union Minister for Social Justice and Empowerment and including transgender community representatives, State nominees and ministry officials; they record its function as advisory and record expressly that it lacks quasi-judicial or enforcement powers. The examinable contrast is with a commission that can receive complaints, hold inquiries and issue binding directions, and the owners use that contrast to explain why declaration-stage recognition can coexist with delivery-stage failure.

Answer: C. Explanation: The Transgender Persons (Protection of Rights) Act, 2019, with Rules notified in 2020, defines a transgender person as a person whose gender does not match the gender assigned at birth, and the owners record that the definition expressly includes trans-men, trans-women, persons with intersex variations, genderqueer persons and persons with socio-cultural identities such as kinnar, hijra, aravani and jogta; the examinable point is that the statute uses an inclusive enumeration rather than a single medicalised test, so an answer that reduces the category to one community or to a surgical status has narrowed the definition Parliament actually enacted. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q8. Which statement avoids a close-option trap about Who is a transgender person under the 2019 Act?

A. The owners record SMILE, administered by the Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment, as an umbrella with two distinct sub-schemes rather than a single transgender programme: a transgender-welfare sub-scheme covering Garima Greh shelters, skill development and health and counselling support, and a begging-rehabilitation sub-scheme covering a different target group under the same umbrella. The owners flag the reduction of SMILE to transgender welfare alone as a trap, because the umbrella structure and the two target groups are what an objective question is most likely to test. B. The owners record that the 2019 Act prohibits discrimination against a transgender person in education, employment, healthcare, access to goods, facilities and public services, and the right to reside with family, and that it creates offences for specific harms including sexual abuse, denial of access to a public place and eviction; they record that an establishment must designate a complaint officer to deal with complaints. They then attach the qualification that a formal complaint route is not the same as accessible enforcement, because awareness, independence and effective remedy remain weak, which is why Section 3 is a starting point for an answer rather than its conclusion. C. The owners record the National Council for Transgender Persons as the body created under the 2019 Act, chaired by the Union Minister for Social Justice and Empowerment and including transgender community representatives, State nominees and ministry officials; they record its function as advisory and record expressly that it lacks quasi-judicial or enforcement powers. The examinable contrast is with a commission that can receive complaints, hold inquiries and issue binding directions, and the owners use that contrast to explain why declaration-stage recognition can coexist with delivery-stage failure. D. The Transgender Persons (Protection of Rights) Act, 2019, with Rules notified in 2020, defines a transgender person as a person whose gender does not match the gender assigned at birth, and the owners record that the definition expressly includes trans-men, trans-women, persons with intersex variations, genderqueer persons and persons with socio-cultural identities such as kinnar, hijra, aravani and jogta; the examinable point is that the statute uses an inclusive enumeration rather than a single medicalised test, so an answer that reduces the category to one community or to a surgical status has narrowed the definition Parliament actually enacted.

Answer: D. Explanation: The Transgender Persons (Protection of Rights) Act, 2019, with Rules notified in 2020, defines a transgender person as a person whose gender does not match the gender assigned at birth, and the owners record that the definition expressly includes trans-men, trans-women, persons with intersex variations, genderqueer persons and persons with socio-cultural identities such as kinnar, hijra, aravani and jogta; the examinable point is that the statute uses an inclusive enumeration rather than a single medicalised test, so an answer that reduces the category to one community or to a surgical status has narrowed the definition Parliament actually enacted. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q9. Which statement correctly identifies The certificate of identity and its two distinct routes?

A. The owners keep two certification routes apart. A District Magistrate issues the basic certificate recognising a person's self-perceived transgender identity, and no medical or surgical requirement applies to it. Section 7 separately permits a revised male or female certificate after medical intervention, which is an additional route and not a precondition for basic recognition. The distinction is the single most tested detail in this half of the topic, because an answer that says the Act requires surgery for recognition inverts the statutory scheme, and an answer that ignores Section 7 loses the reason critics describe the design as certificate-based rather than self-declaratory. B. The owners record NALSA v. Union of India, decided by the Supreme Court in 2014, as the judgment recognising transgender persons' right to a self-identified gender under Articles 14, 15 and 21, directing welfare measures and directing that the government treat transgender persons as socially and educationally backward and consider extending backward-class benefits; the owners also record, as an advanced point, that the 2019 Act did not fully adopt that direction, and they instruct that no uniform national horizontal-reservation rule be invented, because the status of such claims remains a State and litigation question rather than a settled statutory entitlement. C. The owners record that the 2019 Act prohibits discrimination against a transgender person in education, employment, healthcare, access to goods, facilities and public services, and the right to reside with family, and that it creates offences for specific harms including sexual abuse, denial of access to a public place and eviction; they record that an establishment must designate a complaint officer to deal with complaints. They then attach the qualification that a formal complaint route is not the same as accessible enforcement, because awareness, independence and effective remedy remain weak, which is why Section 3 is a starting point for an answer rather than its conclusion. D. The owners insist on separating legal authorities that answers routinely blur. NALSA is a judicial directive resting on constitutional articles, broader in principle and including the backward-class consideration; the 2019 Act is Parliament's statutory response, narrower and more procedural, supplying a certificate mechanism, specific prohibitions and named institutions. They differ in legal authority, in scope and in the way each is enforced, so an answer that treats a court direction and an enacted section as interchangeable has confused the source of the obligation it is asserting.

Answer: A. Explanation: The owners keep two certification routes apart. A District Magistrate issues the basic certificate recognising a person's self-perceived transgender identity, and no medical or surgical requirement applies to it. Section 7 separately permits a revised male or female certificate after medical intervention, which is an additional route and not a precondition for basic recognition. The distinction is the single most tested detail in this half of the topic, because an answer that says the Act requires surgery for recognition inverts the statutory scheme, and an answer that ignores Section 7 loses the reason critics describe the design as certificate-based rather than self-declaratory. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q10. Which chronology card should be filed under The certificate of identity and its two distinct routes?

A. The owners record the National Council for Transgender Persons as the body created under the 2019 Act, chaired by the Union Minister for Social Justice and Empowerment and including transgender community representatives, State nominees and ministry officials; they record its function as advisory and record expressly that it lacks quasi-judicial or enforcement powers. The examinable contrast is with a commission that can receive complaints, hold inquiries and issue binding directions, and the owners use that contrast to explain why declaration-stage recognition can coexist with delivery-stage failure. B. The owners keep two certification routes apart. A District Magistrate issues the basic certificate recognising a person's self-perceived transgender identity, and no medical or surgical requirement applies to it. Section 7 separately permits a revised male or female certificate after medical intervention, which is an additional route and not a precondition for basic recognition. The distinction is the single most tested detail in this half of the topic, because an answer that says the Act requires surgery for recognition inverts the statutory scheme, and an answer that ignores Section 7 loses the reason critics describe the design as certificate-based rather than self-declaratory. C. The owners record that the 2019 Act prohibits discrimination against a transgender person in education, employment, healthcare, access to goods, facilities and public services, and the right to reside with family, and that it creates offences for specific harms including sexual abuse, denial of access to a public place and eviction; they record that an establishment must designate a complaint officer to deal with complaints. They then attach the qualification that a formal complaint route is not the same as accessible enforcement, because awareness, independence and effective remedy remain weak, which is why Section 3 is a starting point for an answer rather than its conclusion. D. The owners insist on separating legal authorities that answers routinely blur. NALSA is a judicial directive resting on constitutional articles, broader in principle and including the backward-class consideration; the 2019 Act is Parliament's statutory response, narrower and more procedural, supplying a certificate mechanism, specific prohibitions and named institutions. They differ in legal authority, in scope and in the way each is enforced, so an answer that treats a court direction and an enacted section as interchangeable has confused the source of the obligation it is asserting.

Answer: B. Explanation: The owners keep two certification routes apart. A District Magistrate issues the basic certificate recognising a person's self-perceived transgender identity, and no medical or surgical requirement applies to it. Section 7 separately permits a revised male or female certificate after medical intervention, which is an additional route and not a precondition for basic recognition. The distinction is the single most tested detail in this half of the topic, because an answer that says the Act requires surgery for recognition inverts the statutory scheme, and an answer that ignores Section 7 loses the reason critics describe the design as certificate-based rather than self-declaratory. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q11. Which option preserves the source-bounded meaning of The certificate of identity and its two distinct routes?

A. The owners record that the 2019 Act prohibits discrimination against a transgender person in education, employment, healthcare, access to goods, facilities and public services, and the right to reside with family, and that it creates offences for specific harms including sexual abuse, denial of access to a public place and eviction; they record that an establishment must designate a complaint officer to deal with complaints. They then attach the qualification that a formal complaint route is not the same as accessible enforcement, because awareness, independence and effective remedy remain weak, which is why Section 3 is a starting point for an answer rather than its conclusion. B. The owners record the National Council for Transgender Persons as the body created under the 2019 Act, chaired by the Union Minister for Social Justice and Empowerment and including transgender community representatives, State nominees and ministry officials; they record its function as advisory and record expressly that it lacks quasi-judicial or enforcement powers. The examinable contrast is with a commission that can receive complaints, hold inquiries and issue binding directions, and the owners use that contrast to explain why declaration-stage recognition can coexist with delivery-stage failure. C. The owners keep two certification routes apart. A District Magistrate issues the basic certificate recognising a person's self-perceived transgender identity, and no medical or surgical requirement applies to it. Section 7 separately permits a revised male or female certificate after medical intervention, which is an additional route and not a precondition for basic recognition. The distinction is the single most tested detail in this half of the topic, because an answer that says the Act requires surgery for recognition inverts the statutory scheme, and an answer that ignores Section 7 loses the reason critics describe the design as certificate-based rather than self-declaratory. D. The owners record SMILE, administered by the Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment, as an umbrella with two distinct sub-schemes rather than a single transgender programme: a transgender-welfare sub-scheme covering Garima Greh shelters, skill development and health and counselling support, and a begging-rehabilitation sub-scheme covering a different target group under the same umbrella. The owners flag the reduction of SMILE to transgender welfare alone as a trap, because the umbrella structure and the two target groups are what an objective question is most likely to test.

Answer: C. Explanation: The owners keep two certification routes apart. A District Magistrate issues the basic certificate recognising a person's self-perceived transgender identity, and no medical or surgical requirement applies to it. Section 7 separately permits a revised male or female certificate after medical intervention, which is an additional route and not a precondition for basic recognition. The distinction is the single most tested detail in this half of the topic, because an answer that says the Act requires surgery for recognition inverts the statutory scheme, and an answer that ignores Section 7 loses the reason critics describe the design as certificate-based rather than self-declaratory. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q12. Which statement avoids a close-option trap about The certificate of identity and its two distinct routes?

A. The owners record the National Council for Transgender Persons as the body created under the 2019 Act, chaired by the Union Minister for Social Justice and Empowerment and including transgender community representatives, State nominees and ministry officials; they record its function as advisory and record expressly that it lacks quasi-judicial or enforcement powers. The examinable contrast is with a commission that can receive complaints, hold inquiries and issue binding directions, and the owners use that contrast to explain why declaration-stage recognition can coexist with delivery-stage failure. B. The owners record Garima Greh as the shelter-home component providing accommodation, food, medical care, skill training and recreation, and they immediately state the limit: shelters address immediate housing and safety needs but do not substitute for long-term economic integration, and their number and geographic spread are limited so that transgender persons outside major urban centres may lack access. The livelihood pathway is the skill-development component, and the owners record that its linkage to formal employment remains weak because stigma persists in hiring, so a shelter count is not evidence of integration. C. The owners record SMILE, administered by the Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment, as an umbrella with two distinct sub-schemes rather than a single transgender programme: a transgender-welfare sub-scheme covering Garima Greh shelters, skill development and health and counselling support, and a begging-rehabilitation sub-scheme covering a different target group under the same umbrella. The owners flag the reduction of SMILE to transgender welfare alone as a trap, because the umbrella structure and the two target groups are what an objective question is most likely to test. D. The owners keep two certification routes apart. A District Magistrate issues the basic certificate recognising a person's self-perceived transgender identity, and no medical or surgical requirement applies to it. Section 7 separately permits a revised male or female certificate after medical intervention, which is an additional route and not a precondition for basic recognition. The distinction is the single most tested detail in this half of the topic, because an answer that says the Act requires surgery for recognition inverts the statutory scheme, and an answer that ignores Section 7 loses the reason critics describe the design as certificate-based rather than self-declaratory.

Answer: D. Explanation: The owners keep two certification routes apart. A District Magistrate issues the basic certificate recognising a person's self-perceived transgender identity, and no medical or surgical requirement applies to it. Section 7 separately permits a revised male or female certificate after medical intervention, which is an additional route and not a precondition for basic recognition. The distinction is the single most tested detail in this half of the topic, because an answer that says the Act requires surgery for recognition inverts the statutory scheme, and an answer that ignores Section 7 loses the reason critics describe the design as certificate-based rather than self-declaratory. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q13. Which statement correctly identifies NALSA v. Union of India and what the Court directed?

A. The owners record NALSA v. Union of India, decided by the Supreme Court in 2014, as the judgment recognising transgender persons' right to a self-identified gender under Articles 14, 15 and 21, directing welfare measures and directing that the government treat transgender persons as socially and educationally backward and consider extending backward-class benefits; the owners also record, as an advanced point, that the 2019 Act did not fully adopt that direction, and they instruct that no uniform national horizontal-reservation rule be invented, because the status of such claims remains a State and litigation question rather than a settled statutory entitlement. B. The owners record the National Council for Transgender Persons as the body created under the 2019 Act, chaired by the Union Minister for Social Justice and Empowerment and including transgender community representatives, State nominees and ministry officials; they record its function as advisory and record expressly that it lacks quasi-judicial or enforcement powers. The examinable contrast is with a commission that can receive complaints, hold inquiries and issue binding directions, and the owners use that contrast to explain why declaration-stage recognition can coexist with delivery-stage failure. C. The owners record that the 2019 Act prohibits discrimination against a transgender person in education, employment, healthcare, access to goods, facilities and public services, and the right to reside with family, and that it creates offences for specific harms including sexual abuse, denial of access to a public place and eviction; they record that an establishment must designate a complaint officer to deal with complaints. They then attach the qualification that a formal complaint route is not the same as accessible enforcement, because awareness, independence and effective remedy remain weak, which is why Section 3 is a starting point for an answer rather than its conclusion. D. The owners insist on separating legal authorities that answers routinely blur. NALSA is a judicial directive resting on constitutional articles, broader in principle and including the backward-class consideration; the 2019 Act is Parliament's statutory response, narrower and more procedural, supplying a certificate mechanism, specific prohibitions and named institutions. They differ in legal authority, in scope and in the way each is enforced, so an answer that treats a court direction and an enacted section as interchangeable has confused the source of the obligation it is asserting.

Answer: A. Explanation: The owners record NALSA v. Union of India, decided by the Supreme Court in 2014, as the judgment recognising transgender persons' right to a self-identified gender under Articles 14, 15 and 21, directing welfare measures and directing that the government treat transgender persons as socially and educationally backward and consider extending backward-class benefits; the owners also record, as an advanced point, that the 2019 Act did not fully adopt that direction, and they instruct that no uniform national horizontal-reservation rule be invented, because the status of such claims remains a State and litigation question rather than a settled statutory entitlement. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q14. Which chronology card should be filed under NALSA v. Union of India and what the Court directed?

A. The owners record the National Council for Transgender Persons as the body created under the 2019 Act, chaired by the Union Minister for Social Justice and Empowerment and including transgender community representatives, State nominees and ministry officials; they record its function as advisory and record expressly that it lacks quasi-judicial or enforcement powers. The examinable contrast is with a commission that can receive complaints, hold inquiries and issue binding directions, and the owners use that contrast to explain why declaration-stage recognition can coexist with delivery-stage failure. B. The owners record NALSA v. Union of India, decided by the Supreme Court in 2014, as the judgment recognising transgender persons' right to a self-identified gender under Articles 14, 15 and 21, directing welfare measures and directing that the government treat transgender persons as socially and educationally backward and consider extending backward-class benefits; the owners also record, as an advanced point, that the 2019 Act did not fully adopt that direction, and they instruct that no uniform national horizontal-reservation rule be invented, because the status of such claims remains a State and litigation question rather than a settled statutory entitlement. C. The owners record SMILE, administered by the Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment, as an umbrella with two distinct sub-schemes rather than a single transgender programme: a transgender-welfare sub-scheme covering Garima Greh shelters, skill development and health and counselling support, and a begging-rehabilitation sub-scheme covering a different target group under the same umbrella. The owners flag the reduction of SMILE to transgender welfare alone as a trap, because the umbrella structure and the two target groups are what an objective question is most likely to test. D. The owners record that the 2019 Act prohibits discrimination against a transgender person in education, employment, healthcare, access to goods, facilities and public services, and the right to reside with family, and that it creates offences for specific harms including sexual abuse, denial of access to a public place and eviction; they record that an establishment must designate a complaint officer to deal with complaints. They then attach the qualification that a formal complaint route is not the same as accessible enforcement, because awareness, independence and effective remedy remain weak, which is why Section 3 is a starting point for an answer rather than its conclusion.

Answer: B. Explanation: The owners record NALSA v. Union of India, decided by the Supreme Court in 2014, as the judgment recognising transgender persons' right to a self-identified gender under Articles 14, 15 and 21, directing welfare measures and directing that the government treat transgender persons as socially and educationally backward and consider extending backward-class benefits; the owners also record, as an advanced point, that the 2019 Act did not fully adopt that direction, and they instruct that no uniform national horizontal-reservation rule be invented, because the status of such claims remains a State and litigation question rather than a settled statutory entitlement. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q15. Which option preserves the source-bounded meaning of NALSA v. Union of India and what the Court directed?

A. The owners record Garima Greh as the shelter-home component providing accommodation, food, medical care, skill training and recreation, and they immediately state the limit: shelters address immediate housing and safety needs but do not substitute for long-term economic integration, and their number and geographic spread are limited so that transgender persons outside major urban centres may lack access. The livelihood pathway is the skill-development component, and the owners record that its linkage to formal employment remains weak because stigma persists in hiring, so a shelter count is not evidence of integration. B. The owners record SMILE, administered by the Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment, as an umbrella with two distinct sub-schemes rather than a single transgender programme: a transgender-welfare sub-scheme covering Garima Greh shelters, skill development and health and counselling support, and a begging-rehabilitation sub-scheme covering a different target group under the same umbrella. The owners flag the reduction of SMILE to transgender welfare alone as a trap, because the umbrella structure and the two target groups are what an objective question is most likely to test. C. The owners record NALSA v. Union of India, decided by the Supreme Court in 2014, as the judgment recognising transgender persons' right to a self-identified gender under Articles 14, 15 and 21, directing welfare measures and directing that the government treat transgender persons as socially and educationally backward and consider extending backward-class benefits; the owners also record, as an advanced point, that the 2019 Act did not fully adopt that direction, and they instruct that no uniform national horizontal-reservation rule be invented, because the status of such claims remains a State and litigation question rather than a settled statutory entitlement. D. The owners record the National Council for Transgender Persons as the body created under the 2019 Act, chaired by the Union Minister for Social Justice and Empowerment and including transgender community representatives, State nominees and ministry officials; they record its function as advisory and record expressly that it lacks quasi-judicial or enforcement powers. The examinable contrast is with a commission that can receive complaints, hold inquiries and issue binding directions, and the owners use that contrast to explain why declaration-stage recognition can coexist with delivery-stage failure.

Answer: C. Explanation: The owners record NALSA v. Union of India, decided by the Supreme Court in 2014, as the judgment recognising transgender persons' right to a self-identified gender under Articles 14, 15 and 21, directing welfare measures and directing that the government treat transgender persons as socially and educationally backward and consider extending backward-class benefits; the owners also record, as an advanced point, that the 2019 Act did not fully adopt that direction, and they instruct that no uniform national horizontal-reservation rule be invented, because the status of such claims remains a State and litigation question rather than a settled statutory entitlement. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q16. Which statement avoids a close-option trap about NALSA v. Union of India and what the Court directed?

A. The owners record SMILE, administered by the Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment, as an umbrella with two distinct sub-schemes rather than a single transgender programme: a transgender-welfare sub-scheme covering Garima Greh shelters, skill development and health and counselling support, and a begging-rehabilitation sub-scheme covering a different target group under the same umbrella. The owners flag the reduction of SMILE to transgender welfare alone as a trap, because the umbrella structure and the two target groups are what an objective question is most likely to test. B. The owners record Garima Greh as the shelter-home component providing accommodation, food, medical care, skill training and recreation, and they immediately state the limit: shelters address immediate housing and safety needs but do not substitute for long-term economic integration, and their number and geographic spread are limited so that transgender persons outside major urban centres may lack access. The livelihood pathway is the skill-development component, and the owners record that its linkage to formal employment remains weak because stigma persists in hiring, so a shelter count is not evidence of integration. C. The owners record the first implementation failure at the counter rather than in the text: District Magistrates may lack sensitisation, so the certificate process can produce delays, discretionary rejections or invasive questioning. They describe the consequence precisely, that a statute resting on self-perceived identity is delivered through an official who exercises administrative judgement, which is why critics argue the design bureaucratises identity even though it does not medicalise the basic certificate; the analytical move is to locate the failure at the discretionary gate rather than in the definition. D. The owners record NALSA v. Union of India, decided by the Supreme Court in 2014, as the judgment recognising transgender persons' right to a self-identified gender under Articles 14, 15 and 21, directing welfare measures and directing that the government treat transgender persons as socially and educationally backward and consider extending backward-class benefits; the owners also record, as an advanced point, that the 2019 Act did not fully adopt that direction, and they instruct that no uniform national horizontal-reservation rule be invented, because the status of such claims remains a State and litigation question rather than a settled statutory entitlement.

Answer: D. Explanation: The owners record NALSA v. Union of India, decided by the Supreme Court in 2014, as the judgment recognising transgender persons' right to a self-identified gender under Articles 14, 15 and 21, directing welfare measures and directing that the government treat transgender persons as socially and educationally backward and consider extending backward-class benefits; the owners also record, as an advanced point, that the 2019 Act did not fully adopt that direction, and they instruct that no uniform national horizontal-reservation rule be invented, because the status of such claims remains a State and litigation question rather than a settled statutory entitlement. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q17. Which statement correctly identifies How a judgment differs from the statute that followed?

A. The owners insist on separating legal authorities that answers routinely blur. NALSA is a judicial directive resting on constitutional articles, broader in principle and including the backward-class consideration; the 2019 Act is Parliament's statutory response, narrower and more procedural, supplying a certificate mechanism, specific prohibitions and named institutions. They differ in legal authority, in scope and in the way each is enforced, so an answer that treats a court direction and an enacted section as interchangeable has confused the source of the obligation it is asserting. B. The owners record that the 2019 Act prohibits discrimination against a transgender person in education, employment, healthcare, access to goods, facilities and public services, and the right to reside with family, and that it creates offences for specific harms including sexual abuse, denial of access to a public place and eviction; they record that an establishment must designate a complaint officer to deal with complaints. They then attach the qualification that a formal complaint route is not the same as accessible enforcement, because awareness, independence and effective remedy remain weak, which is why Section 3 is a starting point for an answer rather than its conclusion. C. The owners record the National Council for Transgender Persons as the body created under the 2019 Act, chaired by the Union Minister for Social Justice and Empowerment and including transgender community representatives, State nominees and ministry officials; they record its function as advisory and record expressly that it lacks quasi-judicial or enforcement powers. The examinable contrast is with a commission that can receive complaints, hold inquiries and issue binding directions, and the owners use that contrast to explain why declaration-stage recognition can coexist with delivery-stage failure. D. The owners record SMILE, administered by the Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment, as an umbrella with two distinct sub-schemes rather than a single transgender programme: a transgender-welfare sub-scheme covering Garima Greh shelters, skill development and health and counselling support, and a begging-rehabilitation sub-scheme covering a different target group under the same umbrella. The owners flag the reduction of SMILE to transgender welfare alone as a trap, because the umbrella structure and the two target groups are what an objective question is most likely to test.

Answer: A. Explanation: The owners insist on separating legal authorities that answers routinely blur. NALSA is a judicial directive resting on constitutional articles, broader in principle and including the backward-class consideration; the 2019 Act is Parliament's statutory response, narrower and more procedural, supplying a certificate mechanism, specific prohibitions and named institutions. They differ in legal authority, in scope and in the way each is enforced, so an answer that treats a court direction and an enacted section as interchangeable has confused the source of the obligation it is asserting. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q18. Which chronology card should be filed under How a judgment differs from the statute that followed?

A. The owners record the National Council for Transgender Persons as the body created under the 2019 Act, chaired by the Union Minister for Social Justice and Empowerment and including transgender community representatives, State nominees and ministry officials; they record its function as advisory and record expressly that it lacks quasi-judicial or enforcement powers. The examinable contrast is with a commission that can receive complaints, hold inquiries and issue binding directions, and the owners use that contrast to explain why declaration-stage recognition can coexist with delivery-stage failure. B. The owners insist on separating legal authorities that answers routinely blur. NALSA is a judicial directive resting on constitutional articles, broader in principle and including the backward-class consideration; the 2019 Act is Parliament's statutory response, narrower and more procedural, supplying a certificate mechanism, specific prohibitions and named institutions. They differ in legal authority, in scope and in the way each is enforced, so an answer that treats a court direction and an enacted section as interchangeable has confused the source of the obligation it is asserting. C. The owners record SMILE, administered by the Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment, as an umbrella with two distinct sub-schemes rather than a single transgender programme: a transgender-welfare sub-scheme covering Garima Greh shelters, skill development and health and counselling support, and a begging-rehabilitation sub-scheme covering a different target group under the same umbrella. The owners flag the reduction of SMILE to transgender welfare alone as a trap, because the umbrella structure and the two target groups are what an objective question is most likely to test. D. The owners record Garima Greh as the shelter-home component providing accommodation, food, medical care, skill training and recreation, and they immediately state the limit: shelters address immediate housing and safety needs but do not substitute for long-term economic integration, and their number and geographic spread are limited so that transgender persons outside major urban centres may lack access. The livelihood pathway is the skill-development component, and the owners record that its linkage to formal employment remains weak because stigma persists in hiring, so a shelter count is not evidence of integration.

Answer: B. Explanation: The owners insist on separating legal authorities that answers routinely blur. NALSA is a judicial directive resting on constitutional articles, broader in principle and including the backward-class consideration; the 2019 Act is Parliament's statutory response, narrower and more procedural, supplying a certificate mechanism, specific prohibitions and named institutions. They differ in legal authority, in scope and in the way each is enforced, so an answer that treats a court direction and an enacted section as interchangeable has confused the source of the obligation it is asserting. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q19. Which option preserves the source-bounded meaning of How a judgment differs from the statute that followed?

A. The owners record SMILE, administered by the Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment, as an umbrella with two distinct sub-schemes rather than a single transgender programme: a transgender-welfare sub-scheme covering Garima Greh shelters, skill development and health and counselling support, and a begging-rehabilitation sub-scheme covering a different target group under the same umbrella. The owners flag the reduction of SMILE to transgender welfare alone as a trap, because the umbrella structure and the two target groups are what an objective question is most likely to test. B. The owners record the first implementation failure at the counter rather than in the text: District Magistrates may lack sensitisation, so the certificate process can produce delays, discretionary rejections or invasive questioning. They describe the consequence precisely, that a statute resting on self-perceived identity is delivered through an official who exercises administrative judgement, which is why critics argue the design bureaucratises identity even though it does not medicalise the basic certificate; the analytical move is to locate the failure at the discretionary gate rather than in the definition. C. The owners insist on separating legal authorities that answers routinely blur. NALSA is a judicial directive resting on constitutional articles, broader in principle and including the backward-class consideration; the 2019 Act is Parliament's statutory response, narrower and more procedural, supplying a certificate mechanism, specific prohibitions and named institutions. They differ in legal authority, in scope and in the way each is enforced, so an answer that treats a court direction and an enacted section as interchangeable has confused the source of the obligation it is asserting. D. The owners record Garima Greh as the shelter-home component providing accommodation, food, medical care, skill training and recreation, and they immediately state the limit: shelters address immediate housing and safety needs but do not substitute for long-term economic integration, and their number and geographic spread are limited so that transgender persons outside major urban centres may lack access. The livelihood pathway is the skill-development component, and the owners record that its linkage to formal employment remains weak because stigma persists in hiring, so a shelter count is not evidence of integration.

Answer: C. Explanation: The owners insist on separating legal authorities that answers routinely blur. NALSA is a judicial directive resting on constitutional articles, broader in principle and including the backward-class consideration; the 2019 Act is Parliament's statutory response, narrower and more procedural, supplying a certificate mechanism, specific prohibitions and named institutions. They differ in legal authority, in scope and in the way each is enforced, so an answer that treats a court direction and an enacted section as interchangeable has confused the source of the obligation it is asserting. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q20. Which statement avoids a close-option trap about How a judgment differs from the statute that followed?

A. The owners record the first implementation failure at the counter rather than in the text: District Magistrates may lack sensitisation, so the certificate process can produce delays, discretionary rejections or invasive questioning. They describe the consequence precisely, that a statute resting on self-perceived identity is delivered through an official who exercises administrative judgement, which is why critics argue the design bureaucratises identity even though it does not medicalise the basic certificate; the analytical move is to locate the failure at the discretionary gate rather than in the definition. B. The owners set out the rest of the transgender failure chain in order: the complaint-officer route exists but awareness, independence and effective remedy are weak; Garima Greh coverage is limited in number and spread; and skill training exists without strong formal-employment linkage. They add the illustration of a person who holds a District Magistrate certificate in a smaller town and still faces housing discrimination with no local enforcement agency to approach, which converts an abstract enforcement gap into a locatable administrative absence that an answer can name. C. The owners record Garima Greh as the shelter-home component providing accommodation, food, medical care, skill training and recreation, and they immediately state the limit: shelters address immediate housing and safety needs but do not substitute for long-term economic integration, and their number and geographic spread are limited so that transgender persons outside major urban centres may lack access. The livelihood pathway is the skill-development component, and the owners record that its linkage to formal employment remains weak because stigma persists in hiring, so a shelter count is not evidence of integration. D. The owners insist on separating legal authorities that answers routinely blur. NALSA is a judicial directive resting on constitutional articles, broader in principle and including the backward-class consideration; the 2019 Act is Parliament's statutory response, narrower and more procedural, supplying a certificate mechanism, specific prohibitions and named institutions. They differ in legal authority, in scope and in the way each is enforced, so an answer that treats a court direction and an enacted section as interchangeable has confused the source of the obligation it is asserting.

Answer: D. Explanation: The owners insist on separating legal authorities that answers routinely blur. NALSA is a judicial directive resting on constitutional articles, broader in principle and including the backward-class consideration; the 2019 Act is Parliament's statutory response, narrower and more procedural, supplying a certificate mechanism, specific prohibitions and named institutions. They differ in legal authority, in scope and in the way each is enforced, so an answer that treats a court direction and an enacted section as interchangeable has confused the source of the obligation it is asserting. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q21. Which statement correctly identifies The anti-discrimination provision and the machinery behind it?

A. The owners record that the 2019 Act prohibits discrimination against a transgender person in education, employment, healthcare, access to goods, facilities and public services, and the right to reside with family, and that it creates offences for specific harms including sexual abuse, denial of access to a public place and eviction; they record that an establishment must designate a complaint officer to deal with complaints. They then attach the qualification that a formal complaint route is not the same as accessible enforcement, because awareness, independence and effective remedy remain weak, which is why Section 3 is a starting point for an answer rather than its conclusion. B. The owners record SMILE, administered by the Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment, as an umbrella with two distinct sub-schemes rather than a single transgender programme: a transgender-welfare sub-scheme covering Garima Greh shelters, skill development and health and counselling support, and a begging-rehabilitation sub-scheme covering a different target group under the same umbrella. The owners flag the reduction of SMILE to transgender welfare alone as a trap, because the umbrella structure and the two target groups are what an objective question is most likely to test. C. The owners record Garima Greh as the shelter-home component providing accommodation, food, medical care, skill training and recreation, and they immediately state the limit: shelters address immediate housing and safety needs but do not substitute for long-term economic integration, and their number and geographic spread are limited so that transgender persons outside major urban centres may lack access. The livelihood pathway is the skill-development component, and the owners record that its linkage to formal employment remains weak because stigma persists in hiring, so a shelter count is not evidence of integration. D. The owners record the National Council for Transgender Persons as the body created under the 2019 Act, chaired by the Union Minister for Social Justice and Empowerment and including transgender community representatives, State nominees and ministry officials; they record its function as advisory and record expressly that it lacks quasi-judicial or enforcement powers. The examinable contrast is with a commission that can receive complaints, hold inquiries and issue binding directions, and the owners use that contrast to explain why declaration-stage recognition can coexist with delivery-stage failure.

Answer: A. Explanation: The owners record that the 2019 Act prohibits discrimination against a transgender person in education, employment, healthcare, access to goods, facilities and public services, and the right to reside with family, and that it creates offences for specific harms including sexual abuse, denial of access to a public place and eviction; they record that an establishment must designate a complaint officer to deal with complaints. They then attach the qualification that a formal complaint route is not the same as accessible enforcement, because awareness, independence and effective remedy remain weak, which is why Section 3 is a starting point for an answer rather than its conclusion. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q22. Which chronology card should be filed under The anti-discrimination provision and the machinery behind it?

A. The owners record Garima Greh as the shelter-home component providing accommodation, food, medical care, skill training and recreation, and they immediately state the limit: shelters address immediate housing and safety needs but do not substitute for long-term economic integration, and their number and geographic spread are limited so that transgender persons outside major urban centres may lack access. The livelihood pathway is the skill-development component, and the owners record that its linkage to formal employment remains weak because stigma persists in hiring, so a shelter count is not evidence of integration. B. The owners record that the 2019 Act prohibits discrimination against a transgender person in education, employment, healthcare, access to goods, facilities and public services, and the right to reside with family, and that it creates offences for specific harms including sexual abuse, denial of access to a public place and eviction; they record that an establishment must designate a complaint officer to deal with complaints. They then attach the qualification that a formal complaint route is not the same as accessible enforcement, because awareness, independence and effective remedy remain weak, which is why Section 3 is a starting point for an answer rather than its conclusion. C. The owners record SMILE, administered by the Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment, as an umbrella with two distinct sub-schemes rather than a single transgender programme: a transgender-welfare sub-scheme covering Garima Greh shelters, skill development and health and counselling support, and a begging-rehabilitation sub-scheme covering a different target group under the same umbrella. The owners flag the reduction of SMILE to transgender welfare alone as a trap, because the umbrella structure and the two target groups are what an objective question is most likely to test. D. The owners record the first implementation failure at the counter rather than in the text: District Magistrates may lack sensitisation, so the certificate process can produce delays, discretionary rejections or invasive questioning. They describe the consequence precisely, that a statute resting on self-perceived identity is delivered through an official who exercises administrative judgement, which is why critics argue the design bureaucratises identity even though it does not medicalise the basic certificate; the analytical move is to locate the failure at the discretionary gate rather than in the definition.

Answer: B. Explanation: The owners record that the 2019 Act prohibits discrimination against a transgender person in education, employment, healthcare, access to goods, facilities and public services, and the right to reside with family, and that it creates offences for specific harms including sexual abuse, denial of access to a public place and eviction; they record that an establishment must designate a complaint officer to deal with complaints. They then attach the qualification that a formal complaint route is not the same as accessible enforcement, because awareness, independence and effective remedy remain weak, which is why Section 3 is a starting point for an answer rather than its conclusion. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q23. Which option preserves the source-bounded meaning of The anti-discrimination provision and the machinery behind it?

A. The owners record the first implementation failure at the counter rather than in the text: District Magistrates may lack sensitisation, so the certificate process can produce delays, discretionary rejections or invasive questioning. They describe the consequence precisely, that a statute resting on self-perceived identity is delivered through an official who exercises administrative judgement, which is why critics argue the design bureaucratises identity even though it does not medicalise the basic certificate; the analytical move is to locate the failure at the discretionary gate rather than in the definition. B. The owners record Garima Greh as the shelter-home component providing accommodation, food, medical care, skill training and recreation, and they immediately state the limit: shelters address immediate housing and safety needs but do not substitute for long-term economic integration, and their number and geographic spread are limited so that transgender persons outside major urban centres may lack access. The livelihood pathway is the skill-development component, and the owners record that its linkage to formal employment remains weak because stigma persists in hiring, so a shelter count is not evidence of integration. C. The owners record that the 2019 Act prohibits discrimination against a transgender person in education, employment, healthcare, access to goods, facilities and public services, and the right to reside with family, and that it creates offences for specific harms including sexual abuse, denial of access to a public place and eviction; they record that an establishment must designate a complaint officer to deal with complaints. They then attach the qualification that a formal complaint route is not the same as accessible enforcement, because awareness, independence and effective remedy remain weak, which is why Section 3 is a starting point for an answer rather than its conclusion. D. The owners set out the rest of the transgender failure chain in order: the complaint-officer route exists but awareness, independence and effective remedy are weak; Garima Greh coverage is limited in number and spread; and skill training exists without strong formal-employment linkage. They add the illustration of a person who holds a District Magistrate certificate in a smaller town and still faces housing discrimination with no local enforcement agency to approach, which converts an abstract enforcement gap into a locatable administrative absence that an answer can name.

Answer: C. Explanation: The owners record that the 2019 Act prohibits discrimination against a transgender person in education, employment, healthcare, access to goods, facilities and public services, and the right to reside with family, and that it creates offences for specific harms including sexual abuse, denial of access to a public place and eviction; they record that an establishment must designate a complaint officer to deal with complaints. They then attach the qualification that a formal complaint route is not the same as accessible enforcement, because awareness, independence and effective remedy remain weak, which is why Section 3 is a starting point for an answer rather than its conclusion. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q24. Which statement avoids a close-option trap about The anti-discrimination provision and the machinery behind it?

A. The owners record the Criminal Tribes Act, 1871, as colonial legislation that stigmatised entire communities as born criminals and subjected them to registration, surveillance and restriction of movement; they record that it was repealed in 1952. The examinable content is the mechanism rather than the label: the Act attached criminality to birth and community membership and enforced it through a register and police supervision, which is why its repeal removed a statutory instrument without removing the social identification it had created. B. The owners set out the rest of the transgender failure chain in order: the complaint-officer route exists but awareness, independence and effective remedy are weak; Garima Greh coverage is limited in number and spread; and skill training exists without strong formal-employment linkage. They add the illustration of a person who holds a District Magistrate certificate in a smaller town and still faces housing discrimination with no local enforcement agency to approach, which converts an abstract enforcement gap into a locatable administrative absence that an answer can name. C. The owners record the first implementation failure at the counter rather than in the text: District Magistrates may lack sensitisation, so the certificate process can produce delays, discretionary rejections or invasive questioning. They describe the consequence precisely, that a statute resting on self-perceived identity is delivered through an official who exercises administrative judgement, which is why critics argue the design bureaucratises identity even though it does not medicalise the basic certificate; the analytical move is to locate the failure at the discretionary gate rather than in the definition. D. The owners record that the 2019 Act prohibits discrimination against a transgender person in education, employment, healthcare, access to goods, facilities and public services, and the right to reside with family, and that it creates offences for specific harms including sexual abuse, denial of access to a public place and eviction; they record that an establishment must designate a complaint officer to deal with complaints. They then attach the qualification that a formal complaint route is not the same as accessible enforcement, because awareness, independence and effective remedy remain weak, which is why Section 3 is a starting point for an answer rather than its conclusion.

Answer: D. Explanation: The owners record that the 2019 Act prohibits discrimination against a transgender person in education, employment, healthcare, access to goods, facilities and public services, and the right to reside with family, and that it creates offences for specific harms including sexual abuse, denial of access to a public place and eviction; they record that an establishment must designate a complaint officer to deal with complaints. They then attach the qualification that a formal complaint route is not the same as accessible enforcement, because awareness, independence and effective remedy remain weak, which is why Section 3 is a starting point for an answer rather than its conclusion. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q25. Which statement correctly identifies The National Council for Transgender Persons and its powers?

A. The owners record the National Council for Transgender Persons as the body created under the 2019 Act, chaired by the Union Minister for Social Justice and Empowerment and including transgender community representatives, State nominees and ministry officials; they record its function as advisory and record expressly that it lacks quasi-judicial or enforcement powers. The examinable contrast is with a commission that can receive complaints, hold inquiries and issue binding directions, and the owners use that contrast to explain why declaration-stage recognition can coexist with delivery-stage failure. B. The owners record the first implementation failure at the counter rather than in the text: District Magistrates may lack sensitisation, so the certificate process can produce delays, discretionary rejections or invasive questioning. They describe the consequence precisely, that a statute resting on self-perceived identity is delivered through an official who exercises administrative judgement, which is why critics argue the design bureaucratises identity even though it does not medicalise the basic certificate; the analytical move is to locate the failure at the discretionary gate rather than in the definition. C. The owners record SMILE, administered by the Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment, as an umbrella with two distinct sub-schemes rather than a single transgender programme: a transgender-welfare sub-scheme covering Garima Greh shelters, skill development and health and counselling support, and a begging-rehabilitation sub-scheme covering a different target group under the same umbrella. The owners flag the reduction of SMILE to transgender welfare alone as a trap, because the umbrella structure and the two target groups are what an objective question is most likely to test. D. The owners record Garima Greh as the shelter-home component providing accommodation, food, medical care, skill training and recreation, and they immediately state the limit: shelters address immediate housing and safety needs but do not substitute for long-term economic integration, and their number and geographic spread are limited so that transgender persons outside major urban centres may lack access. The livelihood pathway is the skill-development component, and the owners record that its linkage to formal employment remains weak because stigma persists in hiring, so a shelter count is not evidence of integration.

Answer: A. Explanation: The owners record the National Council for Transgender Persons as the body created under the 2019 Act, chaired by the Union Minister for Social Justice and Empowerment and including transgender community representatives, State nominees and ministry officials; they record its function as advisory and record expressly that it lacks quasi-judicial or enforcement powers. The examinable contrast is with a commission that can receive complaints, hold inquiries and issue binding directions, and the owners use that contrast to explain why declaration-stage recognition can coexist with delivery-stage failure. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q26. Which chronology card should be filed under The National Council for Transgender Persons and its powers?

A. The owners record the first implementation failure at the counter rather than in the text: District Magistrates may lack sensitisation, so the certificate process can produce delays, discretionary rejections or invasive questioning. They describe the consequence precisely, that a statute resting on self-perceived identity is delivered through an official who exercises administrative judgement, which is why critics argue the design bureaucratises identity even though it does not medicalise the basic certificate; the analytical move is to locate the failure at the discretionary gate rather than in the definition. B. The owners record the National Council for Transgender Persons as the body created under the 2019 Act, chaired by the Union Minister for Social Justice and Empowerment and including transgender community representatives, State nominees and ministry officials; they record its function as advisory and record expressly that it lacks quasi-judicial or enforcement powers. The examinable contrast is with a commission that can receive complaints, hold inquiries and issue binding directions, and the owners use that contrast to explain why declaration-stage recognition can coexist with delivery-stage failure. C. The owners set out the rest of the transgender failure chain in order: the complaint-officer route exists but awareness, independence and effective remedy are weak; Garima Greh coverage is limited in number and spread; and skill training exists without strong formal-employment linkage. They add the illustration of a person who holds a District Magistrate certificate in a smaller town and still faces housing discrimination with no local enforcement agency to approach, which converts an abstract enforcement gap into a locatable administrative absence that an answer can name. D. The owners record Garima Greh as the shelter-home component providing accommodation, food, medical care, skill training and recreation, and they immediately state the limit: shelters address immediate housing and safety needs but do not substitute for long-term economic integration, and their number and geographic spread are limited so that transgender persons outside major urban centres may lack access. The livelihood pathway is the skill-development component, and the owners record that its linkage to formal employment remains weak because stigma persists in hiring, so a shelter count is not evidence of integration.

Answer: B. Explanation: The owners record the National Council for Transgender Persons as the body created under the 2019 Act, chaired by the Union Minister for Social Justice and Empowerment and including transgender community representatives, State nominees and ministry officials; they record its function as advisory and record expressly that it lacks quasi-judicial or enforcement powers. The examinable contrast is with a commission that can receive complaints, hold inquiries and issue binding directions, and the owners use that contrast to explain why declaration-stage recognition can coexist with delivery-stage failure. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q27. Which option preserves the source-bounded meaning of The National Council for Transgender Persons and its powers?

A. The owners record the Criminal Tribes Act, 1871, as colonial legislation that stigmatised entire communities as born criminals and subjected them to registration, surveillance and restriction of movement; they record that it was repealed in 1952. The examinable content is the mechanism rather than the label: the Act attached criminality to birth and community membership and enforced it through a register and police supervision, which is why its repeal removed a statutory instrument without removing the social identification it had created. B. The owners record the first implementation failure at the counter rather than in the text: District Magistrates may lack sensitisation, so the certificate process can produce delays, discretionary rejections or invasive questioning. They describe the consequence precisely, that a statute resting on self-perceived identity is delivered through an official who exercises administrative judgement, which is why critics argue the design bureaucratises identity even though it does not medicalise the basic certificate; the analytical move is to locate the failure at the discretionary gate rather than in the definition. C. The owners record the National Council for Transgender Persons as the body created under the 2019 Act, chaired by the Union Minister for Social Justice and Empowerment and including transgender community representatives, State nominees and ministry officials; they record its function as advisory and record expressly that it lacks quasi-judicial or enforcement powers. The examinable contrast is with a commission that can receive complaints, hold inquiries and issue binding directions, and the owners use that contrast to explain why declaration-stage recognition can coexist with delivery-stage failure. D. The owners set out the rest of the transgender failure chain in order: the complaint-officer route exists but awareness, independence and effective remedy are weak; Garima Greh coverage is limited in number and spread; and skill training exists without strong formal-employment linkage. They add the illustration of a person who holds a District Magistrate certificate in a smaller town and still faces housing discrimination with no local enforcement agency to approach, which converts an abstract enforcement gap into a locatable administrative absence that an answer can name.

Answer: C. Explanation: The owners record the National Council for Transgender Persons as the body created under the 2019 Act, chaired by the Union Minister for Social Justice and Empowerment and including transgender community representatives, State nominees and ministry officials; they record its function as advisory and record expressly that it lacks quasi-judicial or enforcement powers. The examinable contrast is with a commission that can receive complaints, hold inquiries and issue binding directions, and the owners use that contrast to explain why declaration-stage recognition can coexist with delivery-stage failure. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q28. Which statement avoids a close-option trap about The National Council for Transgender Persons and its powers?

A. The owners set out the rest of the transgender failure chain in order: the complaint-officer route exists but awareness, independence and effective remedy are weak; Garima Greh coverage is limited in number and spread; and skill training exists without strong formal-employment linkage. They add the illustration of a person who holds a District Magistrate certificate in a smaller town and still faces housing discrimination with no local enforcement agency to approach, which converts an abstract enforcement gap into a locatable administrative absence that an answer can name. B. The owners draw a distinction that objective questions exploit. Denotification in 1952 repealed the criminal-tribe label and removed the statutory classification; it did not provide rehabilitation and did not remove social stigma. Decriminalisation in the sense of a wrongful-conviction remedy would have implied a finding and a reparative consequence, and the owners record that this did not occur. An answer that says these communities were denotified because they were declared innocent has replaced the repeal of a statute with an exoneration that never happened. C. The owners record the Criminal Tribes Act, 1871, as colonial legislation that stigmatised entire communities as born criminals and subjected them to registration, surveillance and restriction of movement; they record that it was repealed in 1952. The examinable content is the mechanism rather than the label: the Act attached criminality to birth and community membership and enforced it through a register and police supervision, which is why its repeal removed a statutory instrument without removing the social identification it had created. D. The owners record the National Council for Transgender Persons as the body created under the 2019 Act, chaired by the Union Minister for Social Justice and Empowerment and including transgender community representatives, State nominees and ministry officials; they record its function as advisory and record expressly that it lacks quasi-judicial or enforcement powers. The examinable contrast is with a commission that can receive complaints, hold inquiries and issue binding directions, and the owners use that contrast to explain why declaration-stage recognition can coexist with delivery-stage failure.

Answer: D. Explanation: The owners record the National Council for Transgender Persons as the body created under the 2019 Act, chaired by the Union Minister for Social Justice and Empowerment and including transgender community representatives, State nominees and ministry officials; they record its function as advisory and record expressly that it lacks quasi-judicial or enforcement powers. The examinable contrast is with a commission that can receive complaints, hold inquiries and issue binding directions, and the owners use that contrast to explain why declaration-stage recognition can coexist with delivery-stage failure. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q29. Which statement correctly identifies SMILE and the two sub-schemes it actually carries?

A. The owners record SMILE, administered by the Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment, as an umbrella with two distinct sub-schemes rather than a single transgender programme: a transgender-welfare sub-scheme covering Garima Greh shelters, skill development and health and counselling support, and a begging-rehabilitation sub-scheme covering a different target group under the same umbrella. The owners flag the reduction of SMILE to transgender welfare alone as a trap, because the umbrella structure and the two target groups are what an objective question is most likely to test. B. The owners record Garima Greh as the shelter-home component providing accommodation, food, medical care, skill training and recreation, and they immediately state the limit: shelters address immediate housing and safety needs but do not substitute for long-term economic integration, and their number and geographic spread are limited so that transgender persons outside major urban centres may lack access. The livelihood pathway is the skill-development component, and the owners record that its linkage to formal employment remains weak because stigma persists in hiring, so a shelter count is not evidence of integration. C. The owners set out the rest of the transgender failure chain in order: the complaint-officer route exists but awareness, independence and effective remedy are weak; Garima Greh coverage is limited in number and spread; and skill training exists without strong formal-employment linkage. They add the illustration of a person who holds a District Magistrate certificate in a smaller town and still faces housing discrimination with no local enforcement agency to approach, which converts an abstract enforcement gap into a locatable administrative absence that an answer can name. D. The owners record the first implementation failure at the counter rather than in the text: District Magistrates may lack sensitisation, so the certificate process can produce delays, discretionary rejections or invasive questioning. They describe the consequence precisely, that a statute resting on self-perceived identity is delivered through an official who exercises administrative judgement, which is why critics argue the design bureaucratises identity even though it does not medicalise the basic certificate; the analytical move is to locate the failure at the discretionary gate rather than in the definition.

Answer: A. Explanation: The owners record SMILE, administered by the Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment, as an umbrella with two distinct sub-schemes rather than a single transgender programme: a transgender-welfare sub-scheme covering Garima Greh shelters, skill development and health and counselling support, and a begging-rehabilitation sub-scheme covering a different target group under the same umbrella. The owners flag the reduction of SMILE to transgender welfare alone as a trap, because the umbrella structure and the two target groups are what an objective question is most likely to test. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q30. Which chronology card should be filed under SMILE and the two sub-schemes it actually carries?

A. The owners record the first implementation failure at the counter rather than in the text: District Magistrates may lack sensitisation, so the certificate process can produce delays, discretionary rejections or invasive questioning. They describe the consequence precisely, that a statute resting on self-perceived identity is delivered through an official who exercises administrative judgement, which is why critics argue the design bureaucratises identity even though it does not medicalise the basic certificate; the analytical move is to locate the failure at the discretionary gate rather than in the definition. B. The owners record SMILE, administered by the Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment, as an umbrella with two distinct sub-schemes rather than a single transgender programme: a transgender-welfare sub-scheme covering Garima Greh shelters, skill development and health and counselling support, and a begging-rehabilitation sub-scheme covering a different target group under the same umbrella. The owners flag the reduction of SMILE to transgender welfare alone as a trap, because the umbrella structure and the two target groups are what an objective question is most likely to test. C. The owners record the Criminal Tribes Act, 1871, as colonial legislation that stigmatised entire communities as born criminals and subjected them to registration, surveillance and restriction of movement; they record that it was repealed in 1952. The examinable content is the mechanism rather than the label: the Act attached criminality to birth and community membership and enforced it through a register and police supervision, which is why its repeal removed a statutory instrument without removing the social identification it had created. D. The owners set out the rest of the transgender failure chain in order: the complaint-officer route exists but awareness, independence and effective remedy are weak; Garima Greh coverage is limited in number and spread; and skill training exists without strong formal-employment linkage. They add the illustration of a person who holds a District Magistrate certificate in a smaller town and still faces housing discrimination with no local enforcement agency to approach, which converts an abstract enforcement gap into a locatable administrative absence that an answer can name.

Answer: B. Explanation: The owners record SMILE, administered by the Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment, as an umbrella with two distinct sub-schemes rather than a single transgender programme: a transgender-welfare sub-scheme covering Garima Greh shelters, skill development and health and counselling support, and a begging-rehabilitation sub-scheme covering a different target group under the same umbrella. The owners flag the reduction of SMILE to transgender welfare alone as a trap, because the umbrella structure and the two target groups are what an objective question is most likely to test. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q31. Which option preserves the source-bounded meaning of SMILE and the two sub-schemes it actually carries?

A. The owners set out the rest of the transgender failure chain in order: the complaint-officer route exists but awareness, independence and effective remedy are weak; Garima Greh coverage is limited in number and spread; and skill training exists without strong formal-employment linkage. They add the illustration of a person who holds a District Magistrate certificate in a smaller town and still faces housing discrimination with no local enforcement agency to approach, which converts an abstract enforcement gap into a locatable administrative absence that an answer can name. B. The owners draw a distinction that objective questions exploit. Denotification in 1952 repealed the criminal-tribe label and removed the statutory classification; it did not provide rehabilitation and did not remove social stigma. Decriminalisation in the sense of a wrongful-conviction remedy would have implied a finding and a reparative consequence, and the owners record that this did not occur. An answer that says these communities were denotified because they were declared innocent has replaced the repeal of a statute with an exoneration that never happened. C. The owners record SMILE, administered by the Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment, as an umbrella with two distinct sub-schemes rather than a single transgender programme: a transgender-welfare sub-scheme covering Garima Greh shelters, skill development and health and counselling support, and a begging-rehabilitation sub-scheme covering a different target group under the same umbrella. The owners flag the reduction of SMILE to transgender welfare alone as a trap, because the umbrella structure and the two target groups are what an objective question is most likely to test. D. The owners record the Criminal Tribes Act, 1871, as colonial legislation that stigmatised entire communities as born criminals and subjected them to registration, surveillance and restriction of movement; they record that it was repealed in 1952. The examinable content is the mechanism rather than the label: the Act attached criminality to birth and community membership and enforced it through a register and police supervision, which is why its repeal removed a statutory instrument without removing the social identification it had created.

Answer: C. Explanation: The owners record SMILE, administered by the Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment, as an umbrella with two distinct sub-schemes rather than a single transgender programme: a transgender-welfare sub-scheme covering Garima Greh shelters, skill development and health and counselling support, and a begging-rehabilitation sub-scheme covering a different target group under the same umbrella. The owners flag the reduction of SMILE to transgender welfare alone as a trap, because the umbrella structure and the two target groups are what an objective question is most likely to test. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q32. Which statement avoids a close-option trap about SMILE and the two sub-schemes it actually carries?

A. The owners draw a distinction that objective questions exploit. Denotification in 1952 repealed the criminal-tribe label and removed the statutory classification; it did not provide rehabilitation and did not remove social stigma. Decriminalisation in the sense of a wrongful-conviction remedy would have implied a finding and a reparative consequence, and the owners record that this did not occur. An answer that says these communities were denotified because they were declared innocent has replaced the repeal of a statute with an exoneration that never happened. B. The owners define Denotified Tribes as communities denotified after the repeal of the 1871 Act, Nomadic Tribes as communities without fixed habitation that follow seasonal movement, and Semi-Nomadic Tribes as those partially settled, and they instruct that classifications and State-level lists vary and that no unsourced all-India population or community total should be used. They attach a parallel caution on the other half of the topic: Census 2011 recorded 4,87,803 people in the residual other sex category, which is often used as a transgender-population anchor but is incomplete because some transgender persons may have been recorded as male or female and the category was not identity-perfect. C. The owners record the Criminal Tribes Act, 1871, as colonial legislation that stigmatised entire communities as born criminals and subjected them to registration, surveillance and restriction of movement; they record that it was repealed in 1952. The examinable content is the mechanism rather than the label: the Act attached criminality to birth and community membership and enforced it through a register and police supervision, which is why its repeal removed a statutory instrument without removing the social identification it had created. D. The owners record SMILE, administered by the Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment, as an umbrella with two distinct sub-schemes rather than a single transgender programme: a transgender-welfare sub-scheme covering Garima Greh shelters, skill development and health and counselling support, and a begging-rehabilitation sub-scheme covering a different target group under the same umbrella. The owners flag the reduction of SMILE to transgender welfare alone as a trap, because the umbrella structure and the two target groups are what an objective question is most likely to test.

Answer: D. Explanation: The owners record SMILE, administered by the Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment, as an umbrella with two distinct sub-schemes rather than a single transgender programme: a transgender-welfare sub-scheme covering Garima Greh shelters, skill development and health and counselling support, and a begging-rehabilitation sub-scheme covering a different target group under the same umbrella. The owners flag the reduction of SMILE to transgender welfare alone as a trap, because the umbrella structure and the two target groups are what an objective question is most likely to test. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q33. Which statement correctly identifies Garima Greh and the limit of a shelter?

A. The owners record Garima Greh as the shelter-home component providing accommodation, food, medical care, skill training and recreation, and they immediately state the limit: shelters address immediate housing and safety needs but do not substitute for long-term economic integration, and their number and geographic spread are limited so that transgender persons outside major urban centres may lack access. The livelihood pathway is the skill-development component, and the owners record that its linkage to formal employment remains weak because stigma persists in hiring, so a shelter count is not evidence of integration. B. The owners set out the rest of the transgender failure chain in order: the complaint-officer route exists but awareness, independence and effective remedy are weak; Garima Greh coverage is limited in number and spread; and skill training exists without strong formal-employment linkage. They add the illustration of a person who holds a District Magistrate certificate in a smaller town and still faces housing discrimination with no local enforcement agency to approach, which converts an abstract enforcement gap into a locatable administrative absence that an answer can name. C. The owners record the first implementation failure at the counter rather than in the text: District Magistrates may lack sensitisation, so the certificate process can produce delays, discretionary rejections or invasive questioning. They describe the consequence precisely, that a statute resting on self-perceived identity is delivered through an official who exercises administrative judgement, which is why critics argue the design bureaucratises identity even though it does not medicalise the basic certificate; the analytical move is to locate the failure at the discretionary gate rather than in the definition. D. The owners record the Criminal Tribes Act, 1871, as colonial legislation that stigmatised entire communities as born criminals and subjected them to registration, surveillance and restriction of movement; they record that it was repealed in 1952. The examinable content is the mechanism rather than the label: the Act attached criminality to birth and community membership and enforced it through a register and police supervision, which is why its repeal removed a statutory instrument without removing the social identification it had created.

Answer: A. Explanation: The owners record Garima Greh as the shelter-home component providing accommodation, food, medical care, skill training and recreation, and they immediately state the limit: shelters address immediate housing and safety needs but do not substitute for long-term economic integration, and their number and geographic spread are limited so that transgender persons outside major urban centres may lack access. The livelihood pathway is the skill-development component, and the owners record that its linkage to formal employment remains weak because stigma persists in hiring, so a shelter count is not evidence of integration. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q34. Which chronology card should be filed under Garima Greh and the limit of a shelter?

A. The owners set out the rest of the transgender failure chain in order: the complaint-officer route exists but awareness, independence and effective remedy are weak; Garima Greh coverage is limited in number and spread; and skill training exists without strong formal-employment linkage. They add the illustration of a person who holds a District Magistrate certificate in a smaller town and still faces housing discrimination with no local enforcement agency to approach, which converts an abstract enforcement gap into a locatable administrative absence that an answer can name. B. The owners record Garima Greh as the shelter-home component providing accommodation, food, medical care, skill training and recreation, and they immediately state the limit: shelters address immediate housing and safety needs but do not substitute for long-term economic integration, and their number and geographic spread are limited so that transgender persons outside major urban centres may lack access. The livelihood pathway is the skill-development component, and the owners record that its linkage to formal employment remains weak because stigma persists in hiring, so a shelter count is not evidence of integration. C. The owners record the Criminal Tribes Act, 1871, as colonial legislation that stigmatised entire communities as born criminals and subjected them to registration, surveillance and restriction of movement; they record that it was repealed in 1952. The examinable content is the mechanism rather than the label: the Act attached criminality to birth and community membership and enforced it through a register and police supervision, which is why its repeal removed a statutory instrument without removing the social identification it had created. D. The owners draw a distinction that objective questions exploit. Denotification in 1952 repealed the criminal-tribe label and removed the statutory classification; it did not provide rehabilitation and did not remove social stigma. Decriminalisation in the sense of a wrongful-conviction remedy would have implied a finding and a reparative consequence, and the owners record that this did not occur. An answer that says these communities were denotified because they were declared innocent has replaced the repeal of a statute with an exoneration that never happened.

Answer: B. Explanation: The owners record Garima Greh as the shelter-home component providing accommodation, food, medical care, skill training and recreation, and they immediately state the limit: shelters address immediate housing and safety needs but do not substitute for long-term economic integration, and their number and geographic spread are limited so that transgender persons outside major urban centres may lack access. The livelihood pathway is the skill-development component, and the owners record that its linkage to formal employment remains weak because stigma persists in hiring, so a shelter count is not evidence of integration. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q35. Which option preserves the source-bounded meaning of Garima Greh and the limit of a shelter?

A. The owners draw a distinction that objective questions exploit. Denotification in 1952 repealed the criminal-tribe label and removed the statutory classification; it did not provide rehabilitation and did not remove social stigma. Decriminalisation in the sense of a wrongful-conviction remedy would have implied a finding and a reparative consequence, and the owners record that this did not occur. An answer that says these communities were denotified because they were declared innocent has replaced the repeal of a statute with an exoneration that never happened.

B. The owners record the Criminal Tribes Act, 1871, as colonial legislation that stigmatised entire communities as born criminals and subjected them to registration, surveillance and restriction of movement; they record that it was repealed in 1952. The examinable content is the mechanism rather than the label: the Act attached criminality to birth and community membership and enforced it through a register and police supervision, which is why its repeal removed a statutory instrument without removing the social identification it had created.

C. The owners record Garima Greh as the shelter-home component providing accommodation, food, medical care, skill training and recreation, and they immediately state the limit: shelters address immediate housing and safety needs but do not substitute for long-term economic integration, and their number and geographic spread are limited so that transgender persons outside major urban centres may lack access. The livelihood pathway is the skill-development component, and the owners record that its linkage to formal employment remains weak because stigma persists in hiring, so a shelter count is not evidence of integration.

D. The owners define Denotified Tribes as communities denotified after the repeal of the 1871 Act, Nomadic Tribes as communities without fixed habitation that follow seasonal movement, and Semi-Nomadic Tribes as those partially settled, and they instruct that classifications and State-level lists vary and that no unsourced all-India population or community total should be used. They attach a parallel caution on the other half of the topic: Census 2011 recorded 4,87,803 people in the residual other sex category, which is often used as a transgender-population anchor but is incomplete because some transgender persons may have been recorded as male or female and the category was not identity-perfect.

Answer: C. Explanation: The owners record Garima Greh as the shelter-home component providing accommodation, food, medical care, skill training and recreation, and they immediately state the limit: shelters address immediate housing and safety needs but do not substitute for long-term economic integration, and their number and geographic spread are limited so that transgender persons outside major urban centres may lack access. The livelihood pathway is the skill-development component, and the owners record that its linkage to formal employment remains weak because stigma persists in hiring, so a shelter count is not evidence of integration. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q36. Which statement avoids a close-option trap about Garima Greh and the limit of a shelter?

A. The owners define Denotified Tribes as communities denotified after the repeal of the 1871 Act, Nomadic Tribes as communities without fixed habitation that follow seasonal movement, and Semi-Nomadic Tribes as those partially settled, and they instruct that classifications and State-level lists vary and that no unsourced all-India population or community total should be used. They attach a parallel caution on the other half of the topic: Census 2011 recorded 4,87,803 people in the residual other sex category, which is often used as a transgender-population anchor but is incomplete because some transgender persons may have been recorded as male or female and the category was not identity-perfect.

B. The owners draw a distinction that objective questions exploit. Denotification in 1952 repealed the criminal-tribe label and removed the statutory classification; it did not provide rehabilitation and did not remove social stigma. Decriminalisation in the sense of a wrongful-conviction remedy would have implied a finding and a reparative consequence, and the owners record that this did not occur. An answer that says these communities were denotified because they were declared innocent has replaced the repeal of a statute with an exoneration that never happened.

C. The owners record two commissions rather than one. The Renke Commission of 2008 and the Idate Commission of 2015 examined denotified, nomadic and semi-nomadic communities and documented historical stigma and welfare invisibility, while weak enumeration limits targeting. The owners record the Idate Commission by its full description as the National Commission for De-notified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Tribes chaired by Bhiku Ramji Idate, and record its key recommendations as a permanent statutory commission, a comprehensive central list of these communities and targeted welfare schemes.

D. The owners record Garima Greh as the shelter-home component providing accommodation, food, medical care, skill training and recreation, and they immediately state the limit: shelters address immediate housing and safety needs but do not substitute for long-term economic integration, and their number and geographic spread are limited so that transgender persons outside major urban centres may lack access. The livelihood pathway is the skill-development component, and the owners record that its linkage to formal employment remains weak because stigma persists in hiring, so a shelter count is not evidence of integration.

Answer: D. Explanation: The owners record Garima Greh as the shelter-home component providing accommodation, food, medical care, skill training and recreation, and they immediately state the limit: shelters address immediate housing and safety needs but do not substitute for long-term economic integration, and their number and geographic spread are limited so that transgender persons outside major urban centres may lack access. The livelihood pathway is the skill-development component, and the owners record that its linkage to formal employment remains weak because stigma persists in hiring, so a shelter count is not evidence of integration. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q37. Which statement correctly identifies The certificate bottleneck at the point of application?

A. The owners record the first implementation failure at the counter rather than in the text: District Magistrates may lack sensitisation, so the certificate process can produce delays, discretionary rejections or invasive questioning. They describe the consequence precisely, that a statute resting on self-perceived identity is delivered through an official who exercises administrative judgement, which is why critics argue the design bureaucratises identity even though it does not medicalise the basic certificate; the analytical move is to locate the failure at the discretionary gate rather than in the definition. B. The owners draw a distinction that objective questions exploit. Denotification in 1952 repealed the criminal-tribe label and removed the statutory classification; it did not provide rehabilitation and did not remove social stigma. Decriminalisation in the sense of a wrongful-conviction remedy would have implied a finding and a reparative consequence, and the owners record that this did not occur. An answer that says these communities were denotified because they were declared innocent has replaced the repeal of a statute with an exoneration that never happened. C. The owners set out the rest of the transgender failure chain in order: the complaint-officer route exists but awareness, independence and effective remedy are weak; Garima Greh coverage is limited in number and spread; and skill training exists without strong formal-employment linkage. They add the illustration of a person who holds a District Magistrate certificate in a smaller town and still faces housing discrimination with no local enforcement agency to approach, which converts an abstract enforcement gap into a locatable administrative absence that an answer can name. D. The owners record the Criminal Tribes Act, 1871, as colonial legislation that stigmatised entire communities as born criminals and subjected them to registration, surveillance and restriction of movement; they record that it was repealed in 1952. The examinable content is the mechanism rather than the label: the Act attached criminality to birth and community membership and enforced it through a register and police supervision, which is why its repeal removed a statutory instrument without removing the social identification it had created.

Answer: A. Explanation: The owners record the first implementation failure at the counter rather than in the text: District Magistrates may lack sensitisation, so the certificate process can produce delays, discretionary rejections or invasive questioning. They describe the consequence precisely, that a statute resting on self-perceived identity is delivered through an official who exercises administrative judgement, which is why critics argue the design bureaucratises identity even though it does not medicalise the basic certificate; the analytical move is to locate the failure at the discretionary gate rather than in the definition. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q38. Which chronology card should be filed under The certificate bottleneck at the point of application?

A. The owners draw a distinction that objective questions exploit. Denotification in 1952 repealed the criminal-tribe label and removed the statutory classification; it did not provide rehabilitation and did not remove social stigma. Decriminalisation in the sense of a wrongful-conviction remedy would have implied a finding and a reparative consequence, and the owners record that this did not occur. An answer that says these communities were denotified because they were declared innocent has replaced the repeal of a statute with an exoneration that never happened. B. The owners record the first implementation failure at the counter rather than in the text: District Magistrates may lack sensitisation, so the certificate process can produce delays, discretionary rejections or invasive questioning. They describe the consequence precisely, that a statute resting on self-perceived identity is delivered through an official who exercises administrative judgement, which is why critics argue the design bureaucratises identity even though it does not medicalise the basic certificate; the analytical move is to locate the failure at the discretionary gate rather than in the definition. C. The owners record the Criminal Tribes Act, 1871, as colonial legislation that stigmatised entire communities as born criminals and subjected them to registration, surveillance and restriction of movement; they record that it was repealed in 1952. The examinable content is the mechanism rather than the label: the Act attached criminality to birth and community membership and enforced it through a register and police supervision, which is why its repeal removed a statutory instrument without removing the social identification it had created. D. The owners define Denotified Tribes as communities denotified after the repeal of the 1871 Act, Nomadic Tribes as communities without fixed habitation that follow seasonal movement, and Semi-Nomadic Tribes as those partially settled, and they instruct that classifications and State-level lists vary and that no unsourced all-India population or community total should be used. They attach a parallel caution on the other half of the topic: Census 2011 recorded 4,87,803 people in the residual other sex category, which is often used as a transgender-population anchor but is incomplete because some transgender persons may have been recorded as male or female and the category was not identity-perfect.

Answer: B. Explanation: The owners record the first implementation failure at the counter rather than in the text: District Magistrates may lack sensitisation, so the certificate process can produce delays, discretionary rejections or invasive questioning. They describe the consequence precisely, that a statute resting on self-perceived identity is delivered through an official who exercises administrative judgement, which is why critics argue the design bureaucratises identity even though it does not medicalise the basic certificate; the analytical move is to locate the failure at the discretionary gate rather than in the definition. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q39. Which option preserves the source-bounded meaning of The certificate bottleneck at the point of application?

A. The owners record two commissions rather than one. The Renke Commission of 2008 and the Idate Commission of 2015 examined denotified, nomadic and semi-nomadic communities and documented historical stigma and welfare invisibility, while weak enumeration limits targeting. The owners record the Idate Commission by its full description as the National Commission for De-notified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Tribes chaired by Bhiku Ramji Idate, and record its key recommendations as a permanent statutory commission, a comprehensive central list of these communities and targeted welfare schemes. B. The owners draw a distinction that objective questions exploit. Denotification in 1952 repealed the criminal-tribe label and removed the statutory classification; it did not provide rehabilitation and did not remove social stigma. Decriminalisation in the sense of a wrongful-conviction remedy would have implied a finding and a reparative consequence, and the owners record that this did not occur. An answer that says these communities were denotified because they were declared innocent has replaced the repeal of a statute with an exoneration that never happened. C. The owners record the first implementation failure at the counter rather than in the text: District Magistrates may lack sensitisation, so the certificate process can produce delays, discretionary rejections or invasive questioning. They describe the consequence precisely, that a statute resting on self-perceived identity is delivered through an official who exercises administrative judgement, which is why critics argue the design bureaucratises identity even though it does not medicalise the basic certificate; the analytical move is to locate the failure at the discretionary gate rather than in the definition. D. The owners define Denotified Tribes as communities denotified after the repeal of the 1871 Act, Nomadic Tribes as communities without fixed habitation that follow seasonal movement, and Semi-Nomadic Tribes as those partially settled, and they instruct that classifications and State-level lists vary and that no unsourced all-India population or community total should be used. They attach a parallel caution on the other half of the topic: Census 2011 recorded 4,87,803 people in the residual other sex category, which is often used as a transgender-population anchor but is incomplete because some transgender persons may have been recorded as male or female and the category was not identity-perfect.

Answer: C. Explanation: The owners record the first implementation failure at the counter rather than in the text: District Magistrates may lack sensitisation, so the certificate process can produce delays, discretionary rejections or invasive questioning. They describe the consequence precisely, that a statute resting on self-perceived identity is delivered through an official who exercises administrative judgement, which is why critics argue the design bureaucratises identity even though it does not medicalise the basic certificate; the analytical move is to locate the failure at the discretionary gate rather than in the definition. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q40. Which statement avoids a close-option trap about The certificate bottleneck at the point of application?

A. The owners define Denotified Tribes as communities denotified after the repeal of the 1871 Act, Nomadic Tribes as communities without fixed habitation that follow seasonal movement, and Semi-Nomadic Tribes as those partially settled, and they instruct that classifications and State-level lists vary and that no unsourced all-India population or community total should be used. They attach a parallel caution on the other half of the topic: Census 2011 recorded 4,87,803 people in the residual other sex category, which is often used as a transgender-population anchor but is incomplete because some transgender persons may have been recorded as male or female and the category was not identity-perfect. B. The owners record the Development and Welfare Board for De-notified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Communities, constituted on 21 February 1919 under the Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment, as a welfare Board that undertakes surveys, coordinates scheme implementation and advises on policy. They then state the institutional boundary that the topic turns on: it is not a statutory commission with quasi-judicial powers, it can recommend but cannot compel State action, and the permanent statutory commission recommended by the Idate Commission has not been enacted, so an answer that upgrades the Board into a commission has changed its legal character. C. The owners record two commissions rather than one. The Renke Commission of 2008 and the Idate Commission of 2015 examined denotified, nomadic and semi-nomadic communities and documented historical stigma and welfare invisibility, while weak enumeration limits targeting. The owners record the Idate Commission by its full description as the National Commission for De-notified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Tribes chaired by Bhiku Ramji Idate, and record its key recommendations as a permanent statutory commission, a comprehensive central list of these communities and targeted welfare schemes. D. The owners record the first implementation failure at the counter rather than in the text: District Magistrates may lack sensitisation, so the certificate process can produce delays, discretionary rejections or invasive questioning. They describe the consequence precisely, that a statute resting on self-perceived identity is delivered through an official who exercises administrative judgement, which is why critics argue the design bureaucratises identity even though it does not medicalise the basic certificate; the analytical move is to locate the failure at the discretionary gate rather than in the definition.

Answer: D. Explanation: The owners record the first implementation failure at the counter rather than in the text: District Magistrates may lack sensitisation, so the certificate process can produce delays, discretionary rejections or invasive questioning. They describe the consequence precisely, that a statute resting on self-perceived identity is delivered through an official who exercises administrative judgement, which is why critics argue the design bureaucratises identity even though it does not medicalise the basic certificate; the analytical move is to locate the failure at the discretionary gate rather than in the definition. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q41. Which statement correctly identifies Where the enforcement gap actually sits?

A. The owners set out the rest of the transgender failure chain in order: the complaint-officer route exists but awareness, independence and effective remedy are weak; Garima Greh coverage is limited in number and spread; and skill training exists without strong formal-employment linkage. They add the illustration of a person who holds a District Magistrate certificate in a smaller town and still faces housing discrimination with no local enforcement agency to approach, which converts an abstract enforcement gap into a locatable administrative absence that an answer can name. B. The owners draw a distinction that objective questions exploit. Denotification in 1952 repealed the criminal-tribe label and removed the statutory classification; it did not provide rehabilitation and did not remove social stigma. Decriminalisation in the sense of a wrongful-conviction remedy would have implied a finding and a reparative consequence, and the owners record that this did not occur. An answer that says these communities were denotified because they were declared innocent has replaced the repeal of a statute with an exoneration that never happened. C. The owners record the Criminal Tribes Act, 1871, as colonial legislation that stigmatised entire communities as born criminals and subjected them to registration, surveillance and restriction of movement; they record that it was repealed in 1952. The examinable content is the mechanism rather than the label: the Act attached criminality to birth and community membership and enforced it through a register and police supervision, which is why its repeal removed a statutory instrument without removing the social identification it had created. D. The owners define Denotified Tribes as communities denotified after the repeal of the 1871 Act, Nomadic Tribes as communities without fixed habitation that follow seasonal movement, and Semi-Nomadic Tribes as those partially settled, and they instruct that classifications and State-level lists vary and that no unsourced all-India population or community total should be used. They attach a parallel caution on the other half of the topic: Census 2011 recorded 4,87,803 people in the residual other sex category, which is often used as a transgender-population anchor but is incomplete because some transgender persons may have been recorded as male or female and the category was not identity-perfect.

Answer: A. Explanation: The owners set out the rest of the transgender failure chain in order: the complaint-officer route exists but awareness, independence and effective remedy are weak; Garima Greh coverage is limited in number and spread; and skill training exists without strong formal-employment linkage. They add the illustration of a person who holds a District Magistrate certificate in a smaller town and still faces housing discrimination with no local enforcement agency to approach, which converts an abstract enforcement gap into a locatable administrative absence that an answer can name. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q42. Which chronology card should be filed under Where the enforcement gap actually sits?

A. The owners define Denotified Tribes as communities denotified after the repeal of the 1871 Act, Nomadic Tribes as communities without fixed habitation that follow seasonal movement, and Semi-Nomadic Tribes as those partially settled, and they instruct that classifications and State-level lists vary and that no unsourced all-India population or community total should be used. They attach a parallel caution on the other half of the topic: Census 2011 recorded 4,87,803 people in the residual other sex category, which is often used as a transgender-population anchor but is incomplete because some transgender persons may have been recorded as male or female and the category was not identity-perfect. B. The owners set out the rest of the transgender failure chain in order: the complaint-officer route exists but awareness, independence and effective remedy are weak; Garima Greh coverage is limited in number and spread; and skill training exists without strong formal-employment linkage. They add the illustration of a person who holds a District Magistrate certificate in a smaller town and still faces housing discrimination with no local enforcement agency to approach, which converts an abstract enforcement gap into a locatable administrative absence that an answer can name. C. The owners draw a distinction that objective questions exploit. Denotification in 1952 repealed the criminal-tribe label and removed the statutory classification; it did not provide rehabilitation and did not remove social stigma. Decriminalisation in the sense of a wrongful-conviction remedy would have implied a finding and a reparative consequence, and the owners record that this did not occur. An answer that says these communities were denotified because they were declared innocent has replaced the repeal of a statute with an exoneration that never happened. D. The owners record two commissions rather than one. The Renke Commission of 2008 and the Idate Commission of 2015 examined denotified, nomadic and semi-nomadic communities and documented historical stigma and welfare invisibility, while weak enumeration limits targeting. The owners record the Idate Commission by its full description as the National Commission for De-notified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Tribes chaired by Bhiku Ramji Idate, and record its key recommendations as a permanent statutory commission, a comprehensive central list of these communities and targeted welfare schemes.

Answer: B. Explanation: The owners set out the rest of the transgender failure chain in order: the complaint-officer route exists but awareness, independence and effective remedy are weak; Garima Greh coverage is limited in number and spread; and skill training exists without strong formal-employment linkage. They add the illustration of a person who holds a District Magistrate certificate in a smaller town and still faces housing discrimination with no local enforcement agency to approach, which converts an abstract enforcement gap into a locatable administrative absence that an answer can name. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q43. Which option preserves the source-bounded meaning of Where the enforcement gap actually sits?

A. The owners record two commissions rather than one. The Renke Commission of 2008 and the Idate Commission of 2015 examined denotified, nomadic and semi-nomadic communities and documented historical stigma and welfare invisibility, while weak enumeration limits targeting. The owners record the Idate Commission by its full description as the National Commission for De-notified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Tribes chaired by Bhiku Ramji Idate, and record its key recommendations as a permanent statutory commission, a comprehensive central list of these communities and targeted welfare schemes. B. The owners record the Development and Welfare Board for De-notified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Communities, constituted on 21 February 2019 under the Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment, as a welfare Board that undertakes surveys, coordinates scheme implementation and advises on policy. They then state the institutional boundary that the topic turns on: it is not a statutory commission with quasi-judicial powers, it can recommend but cannot compel State action, and the permanent statutory commission recommended by the Idate Commission has not been enacted, so an answer that upgrades the Board into a commission has changed its legal character. C. The owners set out the rest of the transgender failure chain in order: the complaint-officer route exists but awareness, independence and effective remedy are weak; Garima Greh coverage is limited in number and spread; and skill training exists without strong formal-employment linkage. They add the illustration of a person who holds a District Magistrate certificate in a smaller town and still faces housing discrimination with no local enforcement agency to approach, which converts an abstract enforcement gap into a locatable administrative absence that an answer can name. D. The owners define Denotified Tribes as communities denotified after the repeal of the 1871 Act, Nomadic Tribes as communities without fixed habitation that follow seasonal movement, and Semi-Nomadic Tribes as those partially settled, and they instruct that classifications and State-level lists vary and that no unsourced all-India population or community total should be used. They attach a parallel caution on the other half of the topic: Census 2011 recorded 4,87,803 people in the residual other sex category, which is often used as a transgender-population anchor but is incomplete because some transgender persons may have been recorded as male or female and the category was not identity-perfect.

Answer: C. Explanation: The owners set out the rest of the transgender failure chain in order: the complaint-officer route exists but awareness, independence and effective remedy are weak; Garima Greh coverage is limited in number and spread; and skill training exists without strong formal-employment linkage. They add the illustration of a person who holds a District Magistrate certificate in a smaller town and still faces housing discrimination with no local enforcement agency to approach, which converts an abstract enforcement gap into a locatable administrative absence that an answer can name. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q44. Which statement avoids a close-option trap about Where the enforcement gap actually sits?

A. The owners record the Development and Welfare Board for De-notified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Communities, constituted on 21 February 2019 under the Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment, as a welfare Board that undertakes surveys, coordinates scheme implementation and advises on policy. They then state the institutional boundary that the topic turns on: it is not a statutory commission with quasi-judicial powers, it can recommend but cannot compel State action, and the permanent statutory commission recommended by the Idate Commission has not been enacted, so an answer that upgrades the Board into a commission has changed its legal character. B. The owners record two commissions rather than one. The Renke Commission of 2008 and the Idate Commission of 2015 examined denotified, nomadic and semi-nomadic communities and documented historical stigma and welfare invisibility, while weak enumeration limits targeting. The owners record the Idate Commission by its full description as the National Commission for De-notified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Tribes chaired by Bhiku Ramji Idate, and record its key recommendations as a permanent statutory commission, a comprehensive central list of these communities and targeted welfare schemes. C. The owners record the Scheme for Economic Empowerment of Denotified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Communities, launched on 16 February 2022, as a dedicated central scheme with four recorded components: free coaching, health-insurance facilitation including a route through the national health-assurance scheme, community livelihood initiatives and housing or land support. They immediately record its boundary, that it is not a comprehensive substitute for documents and State-list recognition and that its coverage remains nascent, so the scheme answers a distributive need while leaving the recognitive and documentary need open. D. The owners set out the rest of the transgender failure chain in order: the complaint-officer route exists but awareness, independence and effective remedy are weak; Garima Greh coverage is limited in number and spread; and skill training exists without strong formal-employment linkage. They add the illustration of a person who holds a District Magistrate certificate in a smaller town and still faces housing discrimination with no local enforcement agency to approach, which converts an abstract enforcement gap into a locatable administrative absence that an answer can name.

Answer: D. Explanation: The owners set out the rest of the transgender failure chain in order: the complaint-officer route exists but awareness, independence and effective remedy are weak; Garima Greh coverage is limited in number and spread; and skill training exists without strong formal-employment linkage. They add the illustration of a person who holds a District Magistrate certificate in a smaller town and still faces housing discrimination with no local enforcement agency to approach, which converts an abstract enforcement gap into a locatable administrative absence that an answer can name. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q45. Which statement correctly identifies The Criminal Tribes Act of 1871 and what it did?

A. The owners record the Criminal Tribes Act, 1871, as colonial legislation that stigmatised entire communities as born criminals and subjected them to registration, surveillance and restriction of movement; they record that it was repealed in 1952. The examinable content is the mechanism rather than the label: the Act attached criminality to birth and community membership and enforced it through a register and police supervision, which is why its repeal removed a statutory instrument without removing the social identification it had created. B. The owners draw a distinction that objective questions exploit. Denotification in 1952 repealed the criminal-tribe label and removed the statutory classification; it did not provide rehabilitation and did not remove social stigma. Decriminalisation in the sense of a wrongful-conviction remedy would have implied a finding and a reparative consequence, and the owners record that this did not occur. An answer that says these communities were denotified because they were declared innocent has replaced the repeal of a statute with an exoneration that never happened. C. The owners record two commissions rather than one. The Renke Commission of 2008 and the Idate Commission of 2015 examined denotified, nomadic and semi-nomadic communities and documented historical stigma and welfare invisibility, while weak enumeration limits targeting. The owners record the Idate Commission by its full description as the National Commission for De-notified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Tribes chaired by Bhiku Ramji Idate, and record its key recommendations as a permanent statutory commission, a comprehensive central list of these communities and targeted welfare schemes. D. The owners define Denotified Tribes as communities denotified after the repeal of the 1871 Act, Nomadic Tribes as communities without fixed habitation that follow seasonal movement, and Semi-Nomadic Tribes as those partially settled, and they instruct that classifications and State-level lists vary and that no unsourced all-India population or community total should be used. They attach a parallel caution on the other half of the topic: Census 2011 recorded 4,87,803 people in the residual other sex category, which is often used as a transgender-population anchor but is incomplete because some transgender persons may have been recorded as male or female and the category was not identity-perfect.

Answer: A. Explanation: The owners record the Criminal Tribes Act, 1871, as colonial legislation that stigmatised entire communities as born criminals and subjected them to registration, surveillance and restriction of movement; they record that it was repealed in 1952. The examinable content is the mechanism rather than the label: the Act attached criminality to birth and community membership and enforced it through a register and police supervision, which is why its repeal removed a statutory instrument without removing the social identification it had created. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q46. Which chronology card should be filed under The Criminal Tribes Act of 1871 and what it did?

A. The owners record two commissions rather than one. The Renke Commission of 2008 and the Idate Commission of 2015 examined denotified, nomadic and semi-nomadic communities and documented historical stigma and welfare invisibility, while weak enumeration limits targeting. The owners record the Idate Commission by its full description as the National Commission for De-notified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Tribes chaired by Bhiku Ramji Idate, and record its key recommendations as a permanent statutory commission, a comprehensive central list of these communities and targeted welfare schemes. B. The owners record the Criminal Tribes Act, 1871, as colonial legislation that stigmatised entire communities as born criminals and subjected them to registration, surveillance and restriction of movement; they record that it was repealed in 1952. The examinable content is the mechanism rather than the label: the Act attached criminality to birth and community membership and enforced it through a register and police supervision, which is why its repeal removed a statutory instrument without removing the social identification it had created. C. The owners define Denotified Tribes as communities denotified after the repeal of the 1871 Act, Nomadic Tribes as communities without fixed habitation that follow seasonal movement, and Semi-Nomadic Tribes as those partially settled, and they instruct that classifications and State-level lists vary and that no unsourced all-India population or community total should be used. They attach a parallel caution on the other half of the topic: Census 2011 recorded 4,87,803 people in the residual other sex category, which is often used as a transgender-population anchor but is incomplete because some transgender persons may have been recorded as male or female and the category was not identity-perfect. D. The owners record the Development and Welfare Board for De-notified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Communities, constituted on 21 February 2019 under the Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment, as a welfare Board that undertakes surveys, coordinates scheme implementation and advises on policy. They then state the institutional boundary that the topic turns on: it is not a statutory commission with quasi-judicial powers, it can recommend but cannot compel State action, and the permanent statutory commission recommended by the Idate Commission has not been enacted, so an answer that upgrades the Board into a commission has changed its legal character.

Answer: B. Explanation: The owners record the Criminal Tribes Act, 1871, as colonial legislation that stigmatised entire communities as born criminals and subjected them to registration, surveillance and restriction of movement; they record that it was repealed in 1952. The examinable content is the mechanism rather than the label: the Act attached criminality to birth and community membership and enforced it through a register and police supervision, which is why its repeal removed a statutory instrument without removing the social identification it had created. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q47. Which option preserves the source-bounded meaning of The Criminal Tribes Act of 1871 and what it did?

A. The owners record the Scheme for Economic Empowerment of Denotified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Communities, launched on 16 February 2022, as a dedicated central scheme with four recorded components: free coaching, health-insurance facilitation including a route through the national health-assurance scheme, community livelihood initiatives and housing or land support. They immediately record its boundary, that it is not a comprehensive substitute for documents and State-list recognition and that its coverage remains nascent, so the scheme answers a distributive need while leaving the recognitive and documentary need open. B. The owners record two commissions rather than one. The Renke Commission of 2008 and the Idate Commission of 2015 examined denotified, nomadic and semi-nomadic communities and documented historical stigma and welfare invisibility, while weak enumeration limits targeting. The owners record the Idate Commission by its full description as the National Commission for De-notified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Tribes chaired by Bhiku Ramji Idate, and record its key recommendations as a permanent statutory commission, a comprehensive central list of these communities and targeted welfare schemes. C. The owners record the Criminal Tribes Act, 1871, as colonial legislation that stigmatised entire communities as born criminals and subjected them to registration, surveillance and restriction of movement; they record that it was repealed in 1952. The examinable content is the mechanism rather than the label: the Act attached criminality to birth and community membership and enforced it through a register and police supervision, which is why its repeal removed a statutory instrument without removing the social identification it had created. D. The owners record the Development and Welfare Board for De-notified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Communities, constituted on 21 February 2019 under the Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment, as a welfare Board that undertakes surveys, coordinates scheme implementation and advises on policy. They then state the institutional boundary that the topic turns on: it is not a statutory commission with quasi-judicial powers, it can recommend but cannot compel State action, and the permanent statutory commission recommended by the Idate Commission has not been enacted, so an answer that upgrades the Board into a commission has changed its legal character.

Answer: C. Explanation: The owners record the Criminal Tribes Act, 1871, as colonial legislation that stigmatised entire communities as born criminals and subjected them to registration, surveillance and restriction of movement; they record that it was repealed in 1952. The examinable content is the mechanism rather than the label: the Act attached criminality to birth and community membership and enforced it through a register and police supervision, which is why its repeal removed a statutory instrument without removing the social identification it had created. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q48. Which statement avoids a close-option trap about The Criminal Tribes Act of 1871 and what it did?

A. The owners record the Scheme for Economic Empowerment of Denotified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Communities, launched on 16 February 2022, as a dedicated central scheme with four recorded components: free coaching, health-insurance facilitation including a route through the national health-assurance scheme, community livelihood initiatives and housing or land support. They immediately record its boundary, that it is not a comprehensive substitute for documents and State-list recognition and that its coverage remains nascent, so the scheme answers a distributive need while leaving the recognitive and documentary need open. B. The owners set out the invisibility chain in order: no central statutory list of these communities exists, so communities appear on different State lists or on none, fragmenting eligibility; nomadic and semi-nomadic ways of life mean families lack a fixed address, preventing issue of a ration card, Aadhaar seeding and a caste certificate in many States; and without documentation families cannot access the health-assurance, food-security or income-support schemes for which they are otherwise among the neediest. The owners add the migration case in which a community listed in one State moves to another where it is not listed and loses eligibility, and the overlap case in which a partially settled community holding backward-class status in a State may gain that reservation while losing scheme-specific benefits. C. The owners record the Development and Welfare Board for De-notified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Communities, constituted on 21 February 2019 under the Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment, as a welfare Board that undertakes surveys, coordinates scheme implementation and advises on policy. They then state the institutional boundary that the topic turns on: it is not a statutory commission with quasi-judicial powers, it can recommend but cannot compel State action, and the permanent statutory commission recommended by the Idate Commission has not been enacted, so an answer that upgrades the Board into a commission has changed its legal character. D. The owners record the Criminal Tribes Act, 1871, as colonial legislation that stigmatised entire communities as born criminals and subjected them to registration, surveillance and restriction of movement; they record that it was repealed in 1952. The examinable content is the mechanism rather than the label: the Act attached criminality to birth and community membership and enforced it through a register and police supervision, which is why its repeal removed a statutory instrument without removing the social identification it had created.

Answer: D. Explanation: The owners record the Criminal Tribes Act, 1871, as colonial legislation that stigmatised entire communities as born criminals and subjected them to registration, surveillance and restriction of movement; they record that it was repealed in 1952. The examinable content is the mechanism rather than the label: the Act attached criminality to birth and community membership and enforced it through a register and police supervision, which is why its repeal removed a statutory instrument without removing the social identification it had created. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q49. Which statement correctly identifies Why denotified does not mean decriminalised?

A. The owners draw a distinction that objective questions exploit. Denotification in 1952 repealed the criminal-tribe label and removed the statutory classification; it did not provide rehabilitation and did not remove social stigma. Decriminalisation in the sense of a wrongful-conviction remedy would have implied a finding and a reparative consequence, and the owners record that this did not occur. An answer that says these communities were denotified because they were declared innocent has replaced the repeal of a statute with an exoneration that never happened. B. The owners record the Development and Welfare Board for De-notified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Communities, constituted on 21 February 2019 under the Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment, as a welfare Board that undertakes surveys, coordinates scheme implementation and advises on policy. They then state the institutional boundary that the topic turns on: it is not a statutory commission with quasi-judicial powers, it can recommend but cannot compel State action, and the permanent statutory commission recommended by the Idate Commission has not been enacted, so an answer that upgrades the Board into a commission has changed its legal character. C. The owners define Denotified Tribes as communities denotified after the repeal of the 1871 Act, Nomadic Tribes as communities without fixed habitation that follow seasonal movement, and Semi-Nomadic Tribes as those partially settled, and they instruct that classifications and State-level lists vary and that no unsourced all-India population or community total should be used. They attach a parallel caution on the other half of the topic: Census 2011 recorded 4,87,803 people in the residual other sex category, which is often used as a transgender-population anchor but is incomplete because some transgender persons may have been recorded as male or female and the category was not identity-perfect. D. The owners record two commissions rather than one. The Renke Commission of 2008 and the Idate Commission of 2015 examined denotified, nomadic and semi-nomadic communities and documented historical stigma and welfare invisibility, while weak enumeration limits targeting. The owners record the Idate Commission by its full description as the National Commission for De-notified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Tribes chaired by Bhiku Ramji Idate, and record its key recommendations as a permanent statutory commission, a comprehensive central list of these communities and targeted welfare schemes.

Answer: A. Explanation: The owners draw a distinction that objective questions exploit. Denotification in 1952 repealed the criminal-tribe label and removed the statutory classification; it did not provide rehabilitation and did not remove social stigma. Decriminalisation in the sense of a wrongful-conviction remedy would have implied a finding and a reparative consequence, and the owners record that this did not occur. An answer that says these communities were denotified because they were declared innocent has replaced the repeal of a statute with an exoneration that never happened. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q50. Which chronology card should be filed under Why denotified does not mean decriminalised?

A. The owners record the Development and Welfare Board for De-notified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Communities, constituted on 21 February 2019 under the Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment, as a welfare Board that undertakes surveys, coordinates scheme implementation and advises on policy. They then state the institutional boundary that the topic turns on: it is not a statutory commission with quasi-judicial powers, it can recommend but cannot compel State action, and the permanent statutory commission recommended by the Idate Commission has not been enacted, so an answer that upgrades the Board into a commission has changed its legal character. B. The owners draw a distinction that objective questions exploit. Denotification in 1952 repealed the criminal-tribe label and removed the statutory classification; it did not provide rehabilitation and did not remove social stigma.

Decriminalisation in the sense of a wrongful-conviction remedy would have implied a finding and a reparative consequence, and the owners record that this did not occur. An answer that says these communities were denotified because they were declared innocent has replaced the repeal of a statute with an exoneration that never happened.

C. The owners record the Scheme for Economic Empowerment of Denotified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Communities, launched on 16 February 2022, as a dedicated central scheme with four recorded components: free coaching, health-insurance facilitation including a route through the national health-assurance scheme, community livelihood initiatives and housing or land support. They immediately record its boundary, that it is not a comprehensive substitute for documents and State-list recognition and that its coverage remains nascent, so the scheme answers a distributive need while leaving the recognitive and documentary need open. D. The owners record two commissions rather than one. The Renke Commission of 2008 and the Idate Commission of 2015 examined denotified, nomadic and semi-nomadic communities and documented historical stigma and welfare invisibility, while weak enumeration limits targeting. The owners record the Idate Commission by its full description as the National Commission for De-notified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Tribes chaired by Bhiku Ramji Idate, and record its key recommendations as a permanent statutory commission, a comprehensive central list of these communities and targeted welfare schemes.

Answer: B. Explanation: The owners draw a distinction that objective questions exploit. Denotification in 1952 repealed the criminal-tribe label and removed the statutory classification; it did not provide rehabilitation and did not remove social stigma. Decriminalisation in the sense of a wrongful-conviction remedy would have implied a finding and a reparative consequence, and the owners record that this did not occur. An answer that says these communities were denotified because they were declared innocent has replaced the repeal of a statute with an exoneration that never happened. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q51. Which option preserves the source-bounded meaning of Why denotified does not mean decriminalised?

A. The owners set out the invisibility chain in order: no central statutory list of these communities exists, so communities appear on different State lists or on none, fragmenting eligibility; nomadic and semi-nomadic ways of life mean families lack a fixed address, preventing issue of a ration card, Aadhaar seeding and a caste certificate in many States; and without documentation families cannot access the health-assurance, food-security or income-support schemes for which they are otherwise among the neediest. The owners add the migration case in which a community listed in one State moves to another where it is not listed and loses eligibility, and the overlap case in which a partially settled community holding backward-class status in a State may gain that reservation while losing scheme-specific benefits. B. The owners record the Development and Welfare Board for De-notified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Communities, constituted on 21 February 2019 under the Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment, as a welfare Board that undertakes surveys, coordinates scheme implementation and advises on policy. They then state the institutional boundary that the topic turns on: it is not a statutory commission with quasi-judicial powers, it can recommend but cannot compel State action, and the permanent statutory commission recommended by the Idate Commission has not been enacted, so an answer that upgrades the Board into a commission has changed its legal character. C. The owners draw a distinction that objective questions exploit. Denotification in 1952 repealed the criminal-tribe label and removed the statutory classification; it did not provide rehabilitation and did not remove social stigma. Decriminalisation in the sense of a wrongful-conviction remedy would have implied a finding and a reparative consequence, and the owners record that this did not occur. An answer that says these communities were denotified because they were declared innocent has replaced the repeal of a statute with an exoneration that never happened. D. The owners record the Scheme for Economic Empowerment of Denotified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Communities, launched on 16 February 2022, as a dedicated central scheme with four recorded components: free coaching, health-insurance facilitation including a route through the national health-assurance scheme, community livelihood initiatives and housing or land support. They immediately record its boundary, that it is not a comprehensive substitute for documents and State-list recognition and that its coverage remains nascent, so the scheme answers a distributive need while leaving the recognitive and documentary need open.

Answer: C. Explanation: The owners draw a distinction that objective questions exploit. Denotification in 1952 repealed the criminal-tribe label and removed the statutory classification; it did not provide rehabilitation and did not remove social stigma. Decriminalisation in the sense of a wrongful-conviction remedy would have implied a finding and a reparative consequence, and the owners record that this did not occur. An answer that says these communities were denotified because they were declared innocent has replaced the repeal of a statute with an exoneration that never happened. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q52. Which statement avoids a close-option trap about Why denotified does not mean decriminalised?

A. The owners refuse a one-sided reform list. Certificate-based recognition secures official documentation but introduces a bureaucratic gate that critics argue weakens the self-determination principle the 2014 judgment affirmed. A dedicated scheme for denotified communities delivers targeted support but risks building a separate welfare silo instead of mainstreaming these communities into larger existing programmes. Advisory bodies such as the Board and the National Council avoid quasi-judicial complexity but lack enforcement teeth. The recommended corrections are a permanent statutory commission on the model of the existing constitutional commissions, a central list on the model of the central backward-class list, documentation camps for nomadic families, sensitisation and a dedicated enforcement route. B. The owners set out the invisibility chain in order: no central statutory list of these communities exists, so communities appear on different State lists or on none, fragmenting eligibility; nomadic and semi-nomadic ways of life mean families lack a fixed address, preventing issue of a ration card, Aadhaar seeding and a caste certificate in many States; and without documentation families cannot access the health-assurance, food-security or income-support schemes for which they are otherwise among the neediest. The owners add the migration case in which a community listed in one State moves to another where it is not listed and loses eligibility, and the overlap case in which a partially settled community holding backward-class status in a State may gain that reservation while losing scheme-specific benefits. C. The owners record the Scheme for Economic Empowerment of Denotified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Communities, launched on 16 February 2022, as a dedicated central scheme with four recorded components: free coaching, health-insurance facilitation including a route through the national health-assurance scheme, community livelihood initiatives and housing or land support. They immediately record its boundary, that it is not a comprehensive substitute for documents and State-list recognition and that its coverage remains nascent, so the scheme answers a distributive need while leaving the recognitive and documentary need open. D. The owners draw a distinction that objective questions exploit. Denotification in 1952 repealed the criminal-tribe label and removed the statutory classification; it did not provide rehabilitation and did not remove social stigma. Decriminalisation in the sense of a wrongful-conviction remedy would have implied a finding and a reparative consequence, and the owners record that this did not occur. An answer that says these communities were denotified because they were declared innocent has replaced the repeal of a statute with an exoneration that never happened.

Answer: D. Explanation: The owners draw a distinction that objective questions exploit. Denotification in 1952 repealed the criminal-tribe label and removed the statutory classification; it did not provide rehabilitation and did not remove social stigma. Decriminalisation in the sense of a wrongful-conviction remedy would have implied a finding and a reparative consequence, and the owners record that this did not occur. An answer that says these communities were denotified because they were declared innocent has replaced the repeal of a statute with an exoneration that never happened. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q53. Which statement correctly identifies Who the DNT, NT and SNT communities are and the counting caution?

A. The owners define Denotified Tribes as communities denotified after the repeal of the 1871 Act, Nomadic Tribes as communities without fixed habitation that follow seasonal movement, and Semi-Nomadic Tribes as those partially settled, and they instruct that classifications and State-level lists vary and that no unsourced all-India population or community total should be used. They attach a parallel caution on the other half of the topic: Census 2011 recorded 4,87,803 people in the residual other sex category, which is often used as a transgender-population anchor but is incomplete because some transgender persons may have been recorded as male or female and the category was not identity-perfect. B. The owners record the Scheme for Economic Empowerment of Denotified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Communities, launched on 16 February 2022, as a dedicated central scheme with four recorded components: free coaching, health-insurance facilitation including a route through the national health-assurance scheme, community livelihood initiatives and housing or land support. They immediately record its boundary, that it is not a comprehensive substitute for documents and State-list recognition and that its coverage remains nascent, so the scheme answers a distributive need while leaving the recognitive and documentary need open. C. The owners record the Development and Welfare Board for De-notified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Communities, constituted on 21 February 2019 under the Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment, as a welfare Board that undertakes surveys, coordinates scheme implementation and advises on policy. They then state the institutional boundary that the topic turns on: it is not a statutory commission with quasi-judicial powers, it can recommend but cannot compel State action, and the permanent statutory commission recommended by the Idate Commission has not been enacted, so an answer that upgrades the Board into a commission has changed its legal character. D. The owners record two commissions rather than one. The Renke Commission of 2008 and the Idate Commission of 2015 examined denotified, nomadic and semi-nomadic communities and documented historical stigma and welfare invisibility, while weak enumeration limits targeting. The owners record the Idate Commission by its full description as the National Commission for De-notified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Tribes chaired by Bhiku Ramji Idate, and record its key recommendations as a permanent statutory commission, a comprehensive central list of these communities and targeted welfare schemes.

Answer: A. Explanation: The owners define Denotified Tribes as communities denotified after the repeal of the 1871 Act, Nomadic Tribes as communities without fixed habitation that follow seasonal movement, and Semi-Nomadic Tribes as those partially settled, and they instruct that classifications and State-level lists vary and that no unsourced all-India population or community total should be used. They attach a parallel caution on the other half of the topic: Census 2011 recorded 4,87,803 people in the residual other sex category, which is often used as a transgender-population anchor but is incomplete because some transgender persons may have been recorded as male or female and the category was not identity-perfect. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q54. Which chronology card should be filed under Who the DNT, NT and SNT communities are and the counting caution?

A. The owners record the Development and Welfare Board for De-notified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Communities, constituted on 21 February 2019 under the Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment, as a welfare Board that undertakes surveys, coordinates scheme implementation and advises on policy. They then state the institutional boundary that the topic turns on: it is not a statutory commission with quasi-judicial powers, it can recommend but cannot compel State action, and the permanent statutory commission recommended by the Idate Commission has not been enacted, so an answer that upgrades the Board into a commission has changed its legal character. B. The owners define Denotified Tribes as communities denotified after the repeal of the 1871 Act, Nomadic Tribes as communities without fixed habitation that follow seasonal movement, and Semi-Nomadic Tribes as those partially settled, and they instruct that classifications and State-level lists vary and that no unsourced all-India population or community total should be used. They attach a parallel caution on the other half of the topic: Census 2011 recorded 4,87,803 people in the residual other sex category, which is often used as a transgender-population anchor but is incomplete because some transgender persons may have been recorded as male or female and the category was not identity-perfect. C. The owners record the Scheme for Economic Empowerment of Denotified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Communities, launched on 16 February 2022, as a dedicated central scheme with four recorded components: free coaching, health-insurance facilitation including a route through the national health-assurance scheme, community livelihood initiatives and housing or land support. They immediately record its boundary, that it is not a comprehensive substitute for documents and State-list recognition and that its coverage remains nascent, so the scheme answers a distributive need while leaving the recognitive and documentary need open. D. The owners set out the invisibility chain in order: no central statutory list of these communities exists, so communities appear on different State lists or on none, fragmenting eligibility; nomadic and semi-nomadic ways of life mean families lack a fixed address, preventing issue of a ration card, Aadhaar seeding and a caste certificate in many States; and without documentation families cannot access the health-assurance, food-security or income-support schemes for which they are otherwise among the neediest. The owners add the migration case in which a community listed in one State moves to another where it is not listed and loses eligibility, and the overlap case in which a partially settled community holding backward-class status in a State may gain that reservation while losing scheme-specific benefits.

Answer: B. Explanation: The owners define Denotified Tribes as communities denotified after the repeal of the 1871 Act, Nomadic Tribes as communities without fixed habitation that follow seasonal movement, and Semi-Nomadic Tribes as those partially settled, and they instruct that classifications and State-level lists vary and that no unsourced all-India population or community total should be used. They attach a parallel caution on the other half of the topic: Census 2011 recorded 4,87,803 people in the residual other sex category, which is often used as a transgender-population anchor but is incomplete because some transgender persons may have been recorded as male or female and the category was not identity-perfect. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q55. Which option preserves the source-bounded meaning of Who the DNT, NT and SNT communities are and the counting caution?

A. The owners record the Scheme for Economic Empowerment of Denotified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Communities, launched on 16 February 2022, as a dedicated central scheme with four recorded components: free coaching, health-insurance facilitation including a route through the national health-assurance scheme, community livelihood initiatives and housing or land support. They immediately record its boundary, that it is not a comprehensive substitute for documents and State-list recognition and that its coverage remains nascent, so the scheme answers a distributive need while leaving the recognitive and documentary need open. B. The owners refuse a one-sided reform list. Certificate-based recognition secures official documentation but introduces a bureaucratic gate that critics argue weakens the self-determination principle the 2014 judgment affirmed. A dedicated scheme for denotified communities delivers targeted support but risks building a separate welfare silo instead of mainstreaming these communities into larger existing programmes. Advisory bodies such as the Board and the National Council avoid quasi-judicial complexity but lack enforcement teeth. The recommended corrections are a permanent statutory commission on the model of the existing constitutional commissions, a central list on the model of the central backward-class list, documentation camps for nomadic families, sensitisation and a dedicated enforcement route. C. The owners define Denotified Tribes as communities denotified after the repeal of the 1871 Act, Nomadic Tribes as communities without fixed habitation that follow seasonal movement, and Semi-Nomadic Tribes as those partially settled, and they instruct that classifications and State-level lists vary and that no unsourced all-India population or community total should be used. They attach a parallel caution on the other half of the topic: Census 2011 recorded 4,87,803 people in the residual other sex category, which is often used as a transgender-population anchor but is incomplete because some transgender persons may have been recorded as male or female and the category was not identity-perfect. D. The owners set out the invisibility chain in order: no central statutory list of these communities exists, so communities appear on different State lists or on none, fragmenting eligibility; nomadic and semi-nomadic ways of life mean families lack a fixed address, preventing issue of a ration card, Aadhaar seeding and a caste certificate in many States; and without documentation families cannot access the health-assurance, food-security or income-support schemes for which they are otherwise among the neediest. The owners add the migration case in which a community listed in one State moves to another where it is not listed and loses eligibility, and the overlap case in which a partially settled community holding backward-class status in a State may gain that reservation while losing scheme-specific benefits.

Answer: C. Explanation: The owners define Denotified Tribes as communities denotified after the repeal of the 1871 Act, Nomadic Tribes as communities without fixed habitation that follow seasonal movement, and Semi-Nomadic Tribes as those partially settled, and they instruct that classifications and State-level lists vary and that no unsourced all-India population or community total should be used. They attach a parallel caution on the other half of the topic: Census 2011 recorded 4,87,803 people in the residual other sex category, which is often used as a transgender-population anchor but is incomplete because some transgender persons may have been recorded as male or female and the category was not identity-perfect. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q56. Which statement avoids a close-option trap about Who the DNT, NT and SNT communities are and the counting caution?

A. The audited 2018-2023 and 2024-2025 Mains routing ledgers route no General Studies question to this owner, the audited 2018-2023, 2024-2025 and 2026 Prelims routing ledgers route no objective question to it, and both the Basic and the Advanced owner state independently that no direct General Studies Paper II Mains question in the audited 2024-2025 papers names transgender persons or these communities. The package therefore records a transparent zero rather than claiming a route, treats the probable questions carried by the owners as anticipated framing rather than as previous-year questions, and supplies six original Mains answers and eighty original objective questions in their place; the outcome measure the owners prescribe is livelihood integration, educational attainment and freedom from discrimination rather than a certificate or enrolment count. B. The owners refuse a one-sided reform list. Certificate-based recognition secures official documentation but introduces a bureaucratic gate that critics argue weakens the self-determination principle the 2014 judgment affirmed. A dedicated scheme for denotified communities delivers targeted support but risks building a separate welfare silo instead of mainstreaming these communities into larger existing programmes. Advisory bodies such as the Board and the National Council avoid quasi-judicial complexity but lack enforcement teeth. The recommended corrections are a permanent statutory commission on the model of the existing constitutional commissions, a central list on the model of the central backward-class list, documentation camps for nomadic families, sensitisation and a dedicated enforcement route. C. The owners set out the invisibility chain in order: no central statutory list of these communities exists, so communities appear on different State lists or on none, fragmenting eligibility; nomadic and semi-nomadic ways of life mean families lack a fixed address, preventing issue of a ration card, Aadhaar seeding and a caste certificate in many States; and without documentation families cannot access the health-assurance, food-security or income-support schemes for which they are otherwise among the neediest. The owners add the migration case in which a community listed in one State moves to another where it is not listed and loses eligibility, and the overlap case in which a partially settled community holding backward-class status in a State may gain that reservation while losing scheme-specific benefits. D. The owners define Denotified Tribes as communities denotified after the repeal of the 1871 Act, Nomadic Tribes as communities without fixed habitation that follow seasonal movement, and Semi-Nomadic Tribes as those partially settled, and they instruct that classifications and State-level lists vary and that no unsourced all-India population or community total should be used. They attach a parallel caution on the other half of the topic: Census 2011 recorded 4,87,803 people in the residual other sex category, which is often used as a transgender-population anchor but is incomplete because some transgender persons may have been recorded as male or female and the category was not identity-perfect.

Answer: D. Explanation: The owners define Denotified Tribes as communities denotified after the repeal of the 1871 Act, Nomadic Tribes as communities without fixed habitation that follow seasonal movement, and Semi-Nomadic Tribes as those partially settled, and they instruct that classifications and State-level lists vary and that no unsourced all-India population or community total should be used. They attach a parallel caution on the other half of the topic: Census 2011 recorded 4,87,803 people in the residual other sex category, which is often used as a transgender-population anchor but is incomplete because some transgender persons may have been recorded as male or female and the category was not identity-perfect. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q57. Which statement correctly identifies Renke and Idate as the named diagnostic record?

A. The owners record two commissions rather than one. The Renke Commission of 2008 and the Idate Commission of 2015 examined denotified, nomadic and semi-nomadic communities and documented historical stigma and welfare invisibility, while weak enumeration limits targeting. The owners record the Idate Commission by its full description as the National Commission for De-notified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Tribes chaired by Bhiku Ramji Idate, and record its key recommendations as a permanent statutory commission, a comprehensive central list of these communities and targeted welfare schemes. B. The owners set out the invisibility chain in order: no central statutory list of these communities exists, so communities appear on different State lists or on none, fragmenting eligibility; nomadic and semi-nomadic ways of life mean families lack a fixed address, preventing issue of a ration card, Aadhaar seeding and a caste certificate in many States; and without documentation families cannot access the health-assurance, food-security or income-support schemes for which they are otherwise among the neediest. The owners add the migration case in which a community listed in one State moves to another where it is not listed and loses eligibility, and the overlap case in which a partially settled community holding backward-class status in a State may gain that reservation while losing scheme-specific benefits. C. The owners record the Development and Welfare Board for De-notified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Communities, constituted on 21 February 2019 under the Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment, as a welfare Board that undertakes surveys, coordinates scheme implementation and advises on policy. They then state the institutional boundary that the topic turns on: it is not a statutory commission with quasi-judicial powers, it can recommend but cannot compel State action, and the permanent statutory commission recommended by the Idate Commission has not been enacted, so an answer that upgrades the Board into a commission has changed its legal character. D. The owners record the Scheme for Economic Empowerment of Denotified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Communities, launched on 16 February 2022, as a dedicated central scheme with four recorded components: free coaching, health-insurance facilitation including a route through the national health-assurance scheme, community livelihood initiatives and housing or land support. They immediately record its boundary, that it is not a comprehensive substitute for documents and State-list recognition and that its coverage remains nascent, so the scheme answers a distributive need while leaving the recognitive and documentary need open.

Answer: A. Explanation: The owners record two commissions rather than one. The Renke Commission of 2008 and the Idate Commission of 2015 examined denotified, nomadic and semi-nomadic communities and documented historical stigma and welfare invisibility, while weak enumeration limits targeting. The owners record the Idate Commission by its full description as the National Commission for De-notified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Tribes chaired by Bhiku Ramji Idate, and record its key recommendations as a permanent statutory commission, a comprehensive central list of these communities and targeted welfare schemes. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q58. Which chronology card should be filed under Renke and Idate as the named diagnostic record?

A. The owners refuse a one-sided reform list. Certificate-based recognition secures official documentation but introduces a bureaucratic gate that critics argue weakens the self-determination principle the 2014 judgment affirmed. A dedicated scheme for denotified communities delivers targeted support but risks building a separate welfare silo instead of mainstreaming these communities into larger existing programmes. Advisory bodies such as the Board and the National Council avoid quasi-judicial complexity but lack enforcement teeth. The recommended corrections are a permanent statutory commission on the model of the existing constitutional commissions, a central list on the model of the central backward-class list, documentation camps for nomadic families, sensitisation and a dedicated enforcement route. B. The owners record two commissions rather than one. The Renke Commission of 2008 and the Idate Commission of 2015 examined denotified, nomadic and semi-nomadic communities and documented historical stigma and welfare invisibility, while weak enumeration limits targeting. The owners record the Idate Commission by its full description as the National Commission for De-notified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Tribes chaired by Bhiku Ramji Idate, and record its key recommendations as a permanent statutory commission, a comprehensive central list of these communities and targeted welfare schemes. C. The owners record the Scheme for Economic Empowerment of Denotified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Communities, launched on 16 February 2022, as a dedicated central scheme with four recorded components: free coaching, health-insurance facilitation including a route through the national health-assurance scheme, community livelihood initiatives and housing or land support. They immediately record its boundary, that it is not a comprehensive substitute for documents and State-list recognition and that its coverage remains nascent, so the scheme answers a distributive need while leaving the recognitive and documentary need open. D. The owners set out the invisibility chain in order: no central statutory list of these communities exists, so communities appear on different State lists or on none, fragmenting eligibility; nomadic and semi-nomadic ways of life mean families lack a fixed address, preventing issue of a ration card, Aadhaar seeding and a caste certificate in many States; and without documentation families cannot access the health-assurance, food-security or income-support schemes for which they are otherwise among the neediest. The owners add the migration case in which a community listed in one State moves to another where it is not listed and loses eligibility, and the overlap case in which a partially settled community holding backward-class status in a State may gain that reservation while losing scheme-specific benefits.

Answer: B. Explanation: The owners record two commissions rather than one. The Renke Commission of 2008 and the Idate Commission of 2015 examined denotified, nomadic and semi-nomadic communities and documented historical stigma and welfare invisibility, while weak enumeration limits targeting. The owners record the Idate Commission by its full description as the National Commission for De-notified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Tribes chaired by Bhiku Ramji Idate, and record its key recommendations as a permanent statutory commission, a comprehensive central list of these communities and targeted welfare schemes. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q59. Which option preserves the source-bounded meaning of Renke and Idate as the named diagnostic record?

A. The owners set out the invisibility chain in order: no central statutory list of these communities exists, so communities appear on different State lists or on none, fragmenting eligibility; nomadic and semi-nomadic ways of life mean families lack a fixed address, preventing issue of a ration card, Aadhaar seeding and a caste certificate in many States; and without documentation families cannot access the health-assurance, food-security or income-support schemes for which they are otherwise among the neediest. The owners add the migration case in which a community listed in one State moves to another where it is not listed and loses eligibility, and the overlap case in which a partially settled community holding backward-class status in a State may gain that reservation while losing scheme-specific benefits. B. The owners refuse a one-sided reform list. Certificate-based recognition secures official documentation but introduces a bureaucratic gate that critics argue weakens the self-determination principle the 2014 judgment affirmed. A dedicated scheme for denotified communities delivers targeted support but risks building a separate welfare silo instead of mainstreaming these communities into larger existing programmes. Advisory bodies such as the Board and the National Council avoid quasi-judicial complexity but lack enforcement teeth. The recommended corrections are a permanent statutory commission on the model of the existing constitutional commissions, a central list on the model of the central backward-class list, documentation camps for nomadic families, sensitisation and a dedicated enforcement route. C. The owners record two commissions rather than one. The Renke Commission of 2008 and the Idate Commission of 2015 examined denotified, nomadic and semi-nomadic communities and documented historical stigma and welfare invisibility, while weak enumeration limits targeting. The owners record the Idate Commission by its full description as the National Commission for De-notified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Tribes chaired by Bhiku Ramji Idate, and record its key recommendations as a permanent statutory commission, a comprehensive central list of these communities and targeted welfare schemes. D. The audited 2018-2023 and 2024-2025 Mains routing ledgers route no General Studies question to this owner, the audited 2018-2023, 2024-2025 and 2026 Prelims routing ledgers route no objective question to it, and both the Basic and the Advanced owner state independently that no direct General Studies Paper II Mains question in the audited 2024-2025 papers names transgender persons or these communities. The package therefore records a transparent zero rather than claiming a route, treats the probable questions carried by the owners as anticipated framing rather than as previous-year questions, and supplies six original Mains answers and eighty original objective questions in their place; the outcome measure the owners prescribe is livelihood integration, educational attainment and freedom from discrimination rather than a certificate or enrolment count.

Answer: C. Explanation: The owners record two commissions rather than one. The Renke Commission of 2008 and the Idate Commission of 2015 examined denotified, nomadic and semi-nomadic communities and documented historical stigma and welfare invisibility, while weak enumeration limits targeting. The owners record the Idate Commission by its full description as the National Commission for De-notified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Tribes chaired by Bhiku Ramji Idate, and record its key recommendations as a permanent statutory commission, a comprehensive central list of these communities and targeted welfare schemes. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q60. Which statement avoids a close-option trap about Renke and Idate as the named diagnostic record?

A. The audited 2018-2023 and 2024-2025 Mains routing ledgers route no General Studies question to this owner, the audited 2018-2023, 2024-2025 and 2026 Prelims routing ledgers route no objective question to it, and both the Basic and the Advanced owner state independently that no direct General Studies Paper II Mains question in the audited 2024-2025 papers names transgender persons or these communities. The package therefore records a transparent zero rather than claiming a route, treats the probable questions carried by the owners as anticipated framing rather than as previous-year questions, and supplies six original Mains answers and eighty original objective questions in their place; the outcome measure the owners prescribe is livelihood integration, educational attainment and freedom from discrimination rather than a certificate or enrolment count. B. The owners refuse a one-sided reform list. Certificate-based recognition secures official documentation but introduces a bureaucratic gate that critics argue weakens the self-determination principle the 2014 judgment affirmed. A dedicated scheme for denotified communities delivers targeted support but risks building a separate welfare silo instead of mainstreaming these communities into larger existing programmes. Advisory bodies such as the Board and the National Council avoid quasi-judicial complexity but lack enforcement teeth. The recommended corrections are a permanent statutory commission on the model of the existing constitutional commissions, a central list on the model of the central backward-class list, documentation camps for nomadic families, sensitisation and a dedicated enforcement route. C. This owner holds two distinct populations that the repository joins by one analytical thread rather than by one identity: transgender persons, whose claim is recognition of a self-perceived gender, and Denotified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic communities, whose claim is release from a colonial criminal label and entry into the documentation on which welfare depends; the owners state the shared structure as recognise identity, then prohibit discrimination, then deliver welfare, and they warn against homogenising the two groups because a transgender person can be socially visible while legally marginalised whereas a nomadic family can be administratively invisible because classifications, documents and State lists are fragmented. The audited routing ledgers route no General Studies Mains demand and no objective demand to this owner, so the package solves none and says so plainly instead of inventing one. D. The owners record two commissions rather than one. The Renke Commission of 2008 and the Idate Commission of 2015 examined denotified, nomadic and semi-nomadic communities and documented historical stigma and welfare invisibility, while weak enumeration limits targeting. The owners record the Idate Commission by its full description as the National Commission for De-notified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Tribes chaired by Bhiku Ramji Idate, and record its key recommendations as a permanent statutory commission, a comprehensive central list of these communities and targeted welfare schemes.

Answer: D. Explanation: The owners record two commissions rather than one. The Renke Commission of 2008 and the Idate Commission of 2015 examined denotified, nomadic and semi-nomadic communities and documented historical stigma and welfare invisibility, while weak enumeration limits targeting. The owners record the Idate Commission by its full description as the National Commission for De-notified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Tribes chaired by Bhiku Ramji Idate, and record its key recommendations as a permanent statutory commission, a comprehensive central list of these communities and targeted welfare schemes. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q61. Which statement correctly identifies The Development and Welfare Board and what it cannot do?

A. The owners record the Development and Welfare Board for De-notified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Communities, constituted on 21 February 2019 under the Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment, as a welfare Board that undertakes surveys, coordinates scheme implementation and advises on policy. They then state the institutional boundary that the topic turns on: it is not a statutory commission with quasi-judicial powers, it can recommend but cannot compel State action, and the permanent statutory commission recommended by the Idate Commission has not been enacted, so an answer that upgrades the Board into a commission has changed its legal character. B. The owners record the Scheme for Economic Empowerment of Denotified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Communities, launched on 16 February 2022, as a dedicated central scheme with four recorded components: free coaching, health-insurance facilitation including a route through the national health-assurance scheme, community livelihood initiatives and housing or land support. They immediately record its boundary, that it is not a comprehensive substitute for documents and State-list recognition and that its coverage remains nascent, so the scheme answers a distributive need while leaving the cognitive and documentary need open. C. The owners set out the invisibility chain in order:

no central statutory list of these communities exists, so communities appear on different State lists or on none, fragmenting eligibility; nomadic and semi-nomadic ways of life mean families lack a fixed address, preventing issue of a ration card, Aadhaar seeding and a caste certificate in many States; and without documentation families cannot access the health-assurance, food-security or income-support schemes for which they are otherwise among the neediest. The owners add the migration case in which a community listed in one State moves to another where it is not listed and loses eligibility, and the overlap case in which a partially settled community holding backward-class status in a State may gain that reservation while losing scheme-specific benefits. D. The owners refuse a one-sided reform list. Certificate-based recognition secures official documentation but introduces a bureaucratic gate that critics argue weakens the self-determination principle the 2014 judgment affirmed. A dedicated scheme for denotified communities delivers targeted support but risks building a separate welfare silo instead of mainstreaming these communities into larger existing programmes. Advisory bodies such as the Board and the National Council avoid quasi-judicial complexity but lack enforcement teeth. The recommended corrections are a permanent statutory commission on the model of the existing constitutional commissions, a central list on the model of the central backward-class list, documentation camps for nomadic families, sensitisation and a dedicated enforcement route.

Answer: A. Explanation: The owners record the Development and Welfare Board for De-notified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Communities, constituted on 21 February 2019 under the Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment, as a welfare Board that undertakes surveys, coordinates scheme implementation and advises on policy. They then state the institutional boundary that the topic turns on: it is not a statutory commission with quasi-judicial powers, it can recommend but cannot compel State action, and the permanent statutory commission recommended by the Idate Commission has not been enacted, so an answer that upgrades the Board into a commission has changed its legal character. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q62. Which chronology card should be filed under The Development and Welfare Board and what it cannot do?

A. The owners refuse a one-sided reform list. Certificate-based recognition secures official documentation but introduces a bureaucratic gate that critics argue weakens the self-determination principle the 2014 judgment affirmed. A dedicated scheme for denotified communities delivers targeted support but risks building a separate welfare silo instead of mainstreaming these communities into larger existing programmes. Advisory bodies such as the Board and the National Council avoid quasi-judicial complexity but lack enforcement teeth. The recommended corrections are a permanent statutory commission on the model of the existing constitutional commissions, a central list on the model of the central backward-class list, documentation camps for nomadic families, sensitisation and a dedicated enforcement route. B. The owners record the Development and Welfare Board for De-notified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Communities, constituted on 21 February 2019 under the Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment, as a welfare Board that undertakes surveys, coordinates scheme implementation and advises on policy. They then state the institutional boundary that the topic turns on: it is not a statutory commission with quasi-judicial powers, it can recommend but cannot compel State action, and the permanent statutory commission recommended by the Idate Commission has not been enacted, so an answer that upgrades the Board into a commission has changed its legal character. C. The audited 2018-2023 and 2024-2025 Mains routing ledgers route no General Studies question to this owner, the audited 2018-2023, 2024-2025 and 2026 Prelims routing ledgers route no objective question to it, and both the Basic and the Advanced owner state independently that no direct General Studies Paper II Mains question in the audited 2024-2025 papers names transgender persons or these communities. The package therefore records a transparent zero rather than claiming a route, treats the probable questions carried by the owners as anticipated framing rather than as previous-year questions, and supplies six original Mains answers and eighty original objective questions in their place; the outcome measure the owners prescribe is livelihood integration, educational attainment and freedom from discrimination rather than a certificate or enrolment count. D. The owners set out the invisibility chain in order: no central statutory list of these communities exists, so communities appear on different State lists or on none, fragmenting eligibility; nomadic and semi-nomadic ways of life mean families lack a fixed address, preventing issue of a ration card, Aadhaar seeding and a caste certificate in many States; and without documentation families cannot access the health-assurance, food-security or income-support schemes for which they are otherwise among the neediest. The owners add the migration case in which a community listed in one State moves to another where it is not listed and loses eligibility, and the overlap case in which a partially settled community holding backward-class status in a State may gain that reservation while losing scheme-specific benefits.

Answer: B. Explanation: The owners record the Development and Welfare Board for De-notified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Communities, constituted on 21 February 2019 under the Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment, as a welfare Board that undertakes surveys, coordinates scheme implementation and advises on policy. They then state the institutional boundary that the topic turns on: it is not a statutory commission with quasi-judicial powers, it can recommend but cannot compel State action, and the permanent statutory commission recommended by the Idate Commission has not been enacted, so an answer that upgrades the Board into a commission has changed its legal character. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q63. Which option preserves the source-bounded meaning of The Development and Welfare Board and what it cannot do?

A. The audited 2018-2023 and 2024-2025 Mains routing ledgers route no General Studies question to this owner, the audited 2018-2023, 2024-2025 and 2026 Prelims routing ledgers route no objective question to it, and both the Basic and the Advanced owner state independently that no direct General Studies Paper II Mains question in the audited 2024-2025 papers names transgender persons or these communities. The package therefore records a transparent zero rather than claiming a route, treats the probable questions carried by the owners as anticipated framing rather than as previous-year questions, and supplies six original Mains answers and eighty original objective questions in their place; the outcome measure the owners prescribe is livelihood integration, educational attainment and freedom from discrimination rather than a certificate or enrolment count. B. The owners refuse a one-sided reform list. Certificate-based recognition secures official documentation but introduces a bureaucratic gate that critics argue weakens the self-determination principle the 2014 judgment affirmed. A dedicated scheme for denotified communities delivers targeted support but risks building a separate welfare silo instead of mainstreaming these communities into larger existing programmes. Advisory bodies such as the Board and the National Council avoid quasi-judicial complexity but lack enforcement teeth. The recommended corrections are a permanent statutory commission on the model of the existing constitutional commissions, a central list on the model of the central backward-class list, documentation camps for nomadic families, sensitisation and a dedicated enforcement route. C. The owners record the Development and Welfare Board for De-notified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Communities, constituted on 21 February 2019 under the Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment, as a welfare Board that undertakes surveys, coordinates scheme implementation and advises on policy. They then state the institutional boundary that the topic turns on: it is not a statutory commission with quasi-judicial powers, it can recommend but cannot compel State action, and the permanent statutory commission recommended by the Idate Commission has not been enacted, so an answer that upgrades the Board into a commission has changed its legal character. D. This owner holds two distinct populations that the repository joins by one analytical thread rather than by one identity: transgender persons, whose claim is recognition of a self-perceived gender, and Denotified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic communities, whose claim is release from a colonial criminal label and entry into the documentation on which welfare depends; the owners state the shared structure as recognise identity, then prohibit discrimination, then deliver welfare, and they warn against homogenising the two groups because a transgender person can be socially visible while legally marginalised whereas a nomadic family can be administratively invisible because classifications, documents and State lists are fragmented. The audited routing ledgers route no General Studies Mains demand and no objective demand to this owner, so the package solves none and says so plainly instead of inventing one.

Answer: C. Explanation: The owners record the Development and Welfare Board for De-notified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Communities, constituted on 21 February 2019 under the Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment, as a welfare Board that undertakes surveys, coordinates scheme implementation and advises on policy. They then state the institutional boundary that the topic turns on: it is not a statutory commission with quasi-judicial powers, it can recommend but cannot compel State action, and the permanent statutory commission recommended by the Idate Commission has not been enacted, so an answer that upgrades the Board into a commission has changed its legal character. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q64. Which statement avoids a close-option trap about The Development and Welfare Board and what it cannot do?

A. This owner holds two distinct populations that the repository joins by one analytical thread rather than by one identity: transgender persons, whose claim is recognition of a self-perceived gender, and Denotified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic communities, whose claim is release from a colonial criminal label and entry into the documentation on which welfare depends; the owners state the shared structure as recognise identity, then prohibit discrimination, then deliver welfare, and they warn against homogenising the two groups because a transgender person can be socially visible while legally marginalised whereas a nomadic family can be administratively invisible because classifications, documents and State lists are fragmented. The audited routing ledgers route no General Studies Mains demand and no objective demand to this owner, so the package solves none and says so plainly instead of inventing one. B. The audited 2018-2023 and 2024-2025 Mains routing ledgers route no General Studies question to this owner, the audited 2018-2023, 2024-2025 and 2026 Prelims routing ledgers route no objective question to it, and both the Basic and the Advanced owner state independently that no direct General Studies Paper II Mains question in the audited 2024-2025 papers names transgender persons or these communities. The package therefore records a transparent zero rather than claiming a route, treats the probable questions carried by the owners as anticipated framing rather than as previous-year questions, and supplies six original Mains answers and eighty original objective questions in their place; the outcome measure the owners prescribe is livelihood integration, educational attainment and freedom from discrimination rather than a certificate or enrolment count. C. The Transgender Persons (Protection of Rights) Act, 2019, with Rules notified in 2020, defines a transgender person as a person whose gender does not match the gender assigned at birth, and the owners record that the definition expressly includes trans-men, trans-women, persons with intersex variations, genderqueer persons and persons with socio-cultural identities such as kinnar, hijra, aravani and jogta; the examinable point is that the statute uses an inclusive enumeration rather than a single medicalised test, so an answer that reduces the category to one community or to a surgical status has narrowed the definition Parliament actually enacted. D. The owners record the Development and Welfare Board for De-notified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Communities, constituted on 21 February 2019 under the Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment, as a welfare Board that undertakes surveys, coordinates scheme implementation and advises on policy. They then state the institutional boundary that the topic turns on: it is not a statutory commission with quasi-judicial powers, it can recommend but cannot compel State action, and the permanent statutory commission recommended by the Ldate Commission has not been enacted, so an answer that upgrades the Board into a commission has changed its legal character.

Answer: D. Explanation: The owners record the Development and Welfare Board for De-notified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Communities, constituted on 21 February 2019 under the Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment, as a welfare Board that undertakes surveys, coordinates scheme implementation and advises on policy. They then state the institutional boundary that the topic turns on: it is not a statutory commission with quasi-judicial powers, it can recommend but cannot compel State action, and the permanent statutory commission recommended by the Ldate Commission has not been enacted, so an answer that upgrades the Board into a commission has changed its legal character. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q65. Which statement correctly identifies SEED and the components the owners actually record?

A. The owners record the Scheme for Economic Empowerment of Denotified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Communities, launched on 16 February 2022, as a dedicated central scheme with four recorded components: free coaching, health-insurance facilitation including a route through the national health-assurance scheme, community livelihood initiatives and housing or land support. They immediately record its boundary, that it is not a comprehensive substitute for documents and State-list recognition and that its coverage remains nascent, so the scheme answers a distributive need while leaving the recognitive and documentary need open. B. The audited 2018-2023 and 2024-2025 Mains routing ledgers route no General Studies question to this owner, the audited 2018-2023, 2024-2025 and 2026 Prelims routing ledgers route no objective question to it, and both the Basic and the Advanced owner state independently that no direct General Studies Paper II Mains question in the audited 2024-2025 papers names transgender persons or these communities. The package therefore records a transparent zero rather than claiming a route, treats the probable questions carried by the owners as anticipated framing rather than as previous-year questions, and supplies six original Mains answers and eighty original objective questions in their place; the outcome measure the owners prescribe is livelihood integration, educational attainment and freedom from discrimination rather than a certificate or enrolment count. C. The owners set out the invisibility chain in order: no central statutory list of these communities exists, so communities appear on different State lists or on none, fragmenting eligibility; nomadic and semi-nomadic ways of life mean families lack a fixed address, preventing issue of a ration card, Aadhaar seeding and a caste certificate in many States; and without documentation families cannot access the health-assurance, food-security or income-support schemes for which they are otherwise among the neediest. The owners add the migration case in which a community listed in one State moves to another where it is not listed and loses eligibility, and the overlap case in which a partially settled community holding backward-class status in a State may gain that reservation while losing scheme-specific benefits. D. The owners refuse a one-sided reform list. Certificate-based recognition secures official documentation but introduces a bureaucratic gate that critics argue weakens the self-determination principle the 2014 judgment affirmed. A dedicated scheme for denotified communities delivers targeted support but risks building a separate welfare silo instead of mainstreaming these communities into larger existing programmes. Advisory bodies such as the Board and the National Council avoid quasi-judicial complexity but lack enforcement teeth. The recommended corrections are a permanent statutory commission on the model of the existing constitutional commissions, a central list on the model of the central backward-class list, documentation camps for nomadic families, sensitisation and a dedicated enforcement route.

Answer: A. Explanation: The owners record the Scheme for Economic Empowerment of Denotified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Communities, launched on 16 February 2022, as a dedicated central scheme with four recorded components: free coaching, health-insurance facilitation including a route through the national health-assurance scheme, community livelihood initiatives and housing or land support. They immediately record its boundary, that it is not a comprehensive substitute for documents and State-list recognition and that its coverage remains nascent, so the scheme answers a distributive need while leaving the recognitive and documentary need open. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q66. Which chronology card should be filed under SEED and the components the owners actually record?

A. The owners refuse a one-sided reform list. Certificate-based recognition secures official documentation but introduces a bureaucratic gate that critics argue weakens the self-determination principle the 2014 judgment affirmed. A dedicated scheme for denotified communities delivers targeted support but risks building a separate welfare silo instead of mainstreaming these communities into larger existing programmes. Advisory bodies such as the Board and the National Council avoid quasi-judicial complexity but lack enforcement teeth. The recommended corrections are a permanent statutory commission on the model of the existing constitutional commissions, a central list on the model of the central backward-class list, documentation camps for nomadic families, sensitisation and a dedicated enforcement route. B. The owners record the Scheme for Economic Empowerment of Denotified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Communities, launched on 16 February 2022, as a dedicated central scheme with four recorded components: free coaching, health-insurance facilitation including a route through the national health-assurance scheme, community livelihood initiatives and housing or land support. They immediately record its boundary, that it is not a comprehensive substitute for documents and State-list recognition and that its coverage remains nascent, so the scheme answers a distributive need while leaving the recognitive and documentary need open. C. This owner holds two distinct populations that the repository joins by one analytical thread rather than by one identity: transgender persons, whose claim is recognition of a self-perceived gender, and Denotified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic communities, whose claim is release from a colonial criminal label and entry into the documentation on which welfare depends; the owners state the shared structure as recognise identity, then prohibit discrimination, then deliver welfare, and they warn against homogenising the two groups because a transgender person can be socially visible while legally marginalised whereas a nomadic family can be administratively invisible because classifications, documents and State lists are fragmented. The audited routing ledgers route no General Studies Mains demand and no objective demand to this owner, so the package solves none and says so plainly instead of inventing one. D. The audited 2018-2023 and 2024-2025 Mains routing ledgers route no General Studies question to this owner, the audited 2018-2023, 2024-2025 and 2026 Prelims routing ledgers route no objective question to it, and both the Basic and the Advanced owner state independently that no direct General Studies Paper II Mains question in the audited 2024-2025 papers names transgender persons or these communities. The package therefore records a transparent zero rather than claiming a route, treats the probable questions carried by the owners as anticipated framing rather than as previous-year questions, and supplies six original Mains answers and eighty original objective questions in their place; the outcome measure the owners prescribe is livelihood integration, educational attainment and freedom from discrimination rather than a certificate or enrolment count.

Answer: B. Explanation: The owners record the Scheme for Economic Empowerment of Denotified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Communities, launched on 16 February 2022, as a dedicated central scheme with four recorded components: free coaching, health-insurance facilitation including a route through the national health-assurance scheme, community livelihood initiatives and housing or land support. They immediately record its boundary, that it is not a comprehensive substitute for documents and State-list recognition and that its coverage remains nascent, so the scheme answers a distributive need while leaving the recognitive and documentary need open. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q67. Which option preserves the source-bounded meaning of SEED and the components the owners actually record?

A. This owner holds two distinct populations that the repository joins by one analytical thread rather than by one identity: transgender persons, whose claim is recognition of a self-perceived gender, and Denotified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic communities, whose claim is release from a colonial criminal label and entry into the documentation on which welfare depends; the owners state the shared structure as recognise identity, then prohibit discrimination, then deliver welfare, and they warn against homogenising the two groups because a transgender person can be socially visible while legally marginalised whereas a nomadic family can be administratively invisible because classifications, documents and State lists are fragmented. The audited routing ledgers route no General Studies Mains demand and no objective demand to this owner, so the package solves none and says so plainly instead of inventing one. B. The Transgender Persons (Protection of Rights) Act, 2019, with Rules notified in 2020, defines a transgender person as a person whose gender does not match the gender assigned at birth, and the owners record that the definition expressly includes trans-men, trans-women, persons with intersex variations, genderqueer persons and persons with socio-cultural identities such as kinnar, hijra, aravani and jogta; the examinable point is that the statute uses an inclusive enumeration rather than a single medicalised test, so an answer that reduces the category to one community or to a surgical status has narrowed the definition Parliament actually enacted. C. The owners record the Scheme for Economic Empowerment of Denotified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Communities, launched on 16 February 2022, as a dedicated central scheme with four recorded components: free coaching, health-insurance facilitation including a route through the national health-assurance scheme, community livelihood initiatives and housing or land support. They immediately record its boundary, that it is not a comprehensive substitute for documents and State-list recognition and that its coverage remains nascent, so the scheme answers a distributive need while leaving the recognitive and documentary need open. D. The audited 2018-2023 and 2024-2025 Mains routing ledgers route no General Studies question to this owner, the audited 2018-2023, 2024-2025 and 2026 Prelims routing ledgers route no objective question to it, and both the Basic and the Advanced owner state independently that no direct General Studies Paper II Mains question in the audited 2024-2025 papers names transgender persons or these communities. The package therefore records a transparent zero rather than claiming a route, treats the probable questions carried by the owners as anticipated framing rather than as previous-year questions, and supplies six original Mains answers and eighty original objective questions in their place; the outcome measure the owners prescribe is livelihood integration, educational attainment and freedom from discrimination rather than a certificate or enrolment count.

Answer: C. Explanation: The owners record the Scheme for Economic Empowerment of Denotified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Communities, launched on 16 February 2022, as a dedicated central scheme with four recorded components: free coaching, health-insurance facilitation including a route through the national health-assurance scheme, community livelihood initiatives and housing or land support. They immediately record its boundary, that it is not a comprehensive substitute for documents and State-list recognition and that its coverage remains nascent, so the scheme answers a distributive need while leaving the recognitive and documentary need open. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q68. Which statement avoids a close-option trap about SEED and the components the owners actually record?

A. The Transgender Persons (Protection of Rights) Act, 2019, with Rules notified in 2020, defines a transgender person as a person whose gender does not match the gender assigned at birth, and the owners record that the definition expressly includes trans-men, trans-women, persons with intersex variations, genderqueer persons and persons with socio-cultural identities such as kinnar, hijra, aravani and jogta; the examinable point is that the statute uses an inclusive enumeration rather than a single medicalised test, so an answer that reduces the category to one community or to a surgical status has narrowed the definition Parliament actually enacted. B. This owner holds two distinct populations that the repository joins by one analytical thread rather than by one identity: transgender persons, whose claim is recognition of a self-perceived gender, and Denotified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic communities, whose claim is release from a colonial criminal label and entry into the documentation on which welfare depends; the owners state the shared structure as recognise identity, then prohibit discrimination, then deliver welfare, and they warn against homogenising the two groups because a transgender person can be socially visible while legally marginalised whereas a nomadic family can be administratively invisible because classifications, documents and State lists are fragmented. The audited routing ledgers route no General Studies Mains demand and no objective demand to this owner, so the package solves none and says so plainly instead of inventing one. C. The owners keep two certification routes apart. A District Magistrate issues the basic certificate recognising a person's self-perceived transgender identity, and no medical or surgical requirement applies to it. Section 7 separately permits a revised male or female certificate after medical intervention, which is an additional route and not a precondition for basic recognition. The distinction is the single most tested detail in this half of the topic, because an answer that says the Act requires surgery for recognition inverts the statutory scheme, and an answer that ignores Section 7 loses the reason critics describe the design as certificate-based rather than self-declaratory. D. The owners record the Scheme for Economic Empowerment of Denotified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Communities, launched on 16 February 2022, as a dedicated central scheme with four recorded components: free coaching, health-insurance facilitation including a route through the national health-assurance scheme, community livelihood initiatives and housing or land support. They immediately record its boundary, that it is not a comprehensive substitute for documents and State-list recognition and that its coverage remains nascent, so the scheme answers a distributive need while leaving the recognitive and documentary need open.

Answer: D. Explanation: The owners record the Scheme for Economic Empowerment of Denotified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Communities, launched on 16 February 2022, as a dedicated central scheme with four recorded components: free coaching, health-insurance facilitation including a route through the national health-assurance scheme, community livelihood initiatives and housing or land support. They immediately record its boundary, that it is not a comprehensive substitute for documents and State-list recognition and that its coverage remains nascent, so the scheme answers a distributive need while leaving the recognitive and documentary need open. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q69. Which statement correctly identifies The documentation barrier that a dedicated scheme cannot remove?

A. The owners set out the invisibility chain in order: no central statutory list of these communities exists, so communities appear on different State lists or on none, fragmenting eligibility; nomadic and semi-nomadic ways of life mean families lack a fixed address, preventing issue of a ration card, Aadhaar seeding and a caste certificate in many States; and without documentation families cannot access the health-assurance, food-security or income-support schemes for which they are otherwise among the neediest. The owners add the migration case in which a community listed in one State moves to another where it is not listed and loses eligibility, and the overlap case in which a partially settled community holding backward-class status in a State may gain that reservation while losing scheme-specific benefits. B. This owner holds two distinct populations that the repository joins by one analytical thread rather than by one identity: transgender persons, whose claim is recognition of a self-perceived gender, and Denotified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic communities, whose claim is release from a colonial criminal label and entry into the documentation on which welfare depends; the owners state the shared structure as recognise identity, then prohibit discrimination, then deliver welfare, and they warn against homogenising the two groups because a transgender person can be socially visible while legally marginalised whereas a nomadic family can be administratively invisible because classifications, documents and State lists are fragmented. The audited routing ledgers route no General Studies Mains demand and no objective demand to this owner, so the package solves none and says so plainly instead of inventing one. C. The audited 2018-2023 and 2024-2025 Mains routing ledgers route no General Studies question to this owner, the audited 2018-2023, 2024-2025 and 2026 Prelims routing ledgers route no objective question to it, and both the Basic and the Advanced owner state independently that no direct General Studies Paper II Mains question in the audited 2024-2025 papers names transgender persons or these communities. The package therefore records a transparent zero rather than claiming a route, treats the probable questions carried by the owners as anticipated framing rather than as previous-year questions, and supplies six original Mains answers and eighty original objective questions in their place; the outcome measure the owners prescribe is livelihood integration, educational attainment and freedom from discrimination rather than a certificate or enrolment count. D. The owners refuse a one-sided reform list. Certificate-based recognition secures official documentation but introduces a bureaucratic gate that critics argue weakens the self-determination principle the 2014 judgment affirmed. A dedicated scheme for denotified communities delivers targeted support but risks building a separate welfare silo instead of mainstreaming these communities into larger existing programmes. Advisory bodies such as the Board and the National Council avoid quasi-judicial complexity but lack enforcement teeth. The recommended corrections are a permanent statutory commission on the model of the existing constitutional commissions, a central list on the model of the central backward-class list, documentation camps for nomadic families, sensitisation and a dedicated enforcement route.

Answer: A. Explanation: The owners set out the invisibility chain in order: no central statutory list of these communities exists, so communities appear on different State lists or on none, fragmenting eligibility; nomadic and semi-nomadic ways of life mean families lack a fixed address, preventing issue of a ration card, Aadhaar seeding and a caste certificate in many States; and without documentation families cannot access the health-assurance, food-security or income-support schemes for which they are otherwise among the neediest. The owners add the migration case in which a community listed in one State moves to another where it is not listed and loses eligibility, and the overlap case in which a partially settled community holding backward-class status in a State may gain that reservation while losing scheme-specific benefits. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q70. Which chronology card should be filed under The documentation barrier that a dedicated scheme cannot remove?

A. The Transgender Persons (Protection of Rights) Act, 2019, with Rules notified in 2020, defines a transgender person as a person whose gender does not match the gender assigned at birth, and the owners record that the definition expressly includes trans-men, trans-women, persons with intersex variations, genderqueer persons and persons with socio-cultural identities such as kinnar, hijra, aravani and jogta; the examinable point is that the statute uses an inclusive enumeration rather than a single medicalised test, so an answer that reduces the category to one community or to a surgical status has narrowed the definition Parliament actually enacted. B. The owners set out the invisibility chain in order: no central statutory list of these communities exists, so communities appear on different State lists or on none, fragmenting eligibility; nomadic and semi-nomadic ways of life mean families lack a fixed address, preventing issue of a ration card, Aadhaar seeding and a caste certificate in many States; and without documentation families cannot access the health-assurance, food-security or income-support schemes for which they are otherwise among the neediest. The owners add the migration case in which a community listed in one State moves to another where it is not listed and loses eligibility, and the overlap case in which a partially settled community holding backward-class status in a State may gain that reservation while losing scheme-specific benefits. C. The audited 2018-2023 and 2024-2025 Mains routing ledgers route no General Studies question to this owner, the audited 2018-2023, 2024-2025 and 2026 Prelims routing ledgers route no objective question to it, and both the Basic and the Advanced owner state independently that no direct General Studies Paper II Mains question in the audited 2024-2025 papers names transgender persons or these communities. The package therefore records a transparent zero rather than claiming a route, treats the probable questions carried by the owners as anticipated framing rather than as previous-year questions, and supplies six original Mains answers and eighty original objective questions in their place; the outcome measure the owners prescribe is livelihood integration, educational attainment and freedom from discrimination rather than a certificate or enrolment count. D. This owner holds two distinct populations that the repository joins by one analytical thread rather than by one identity: transgender persons, whose claim is recognition of a self-perceived gender, and Denotified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic communities, whose claim is release from a colonial criminal label and entry into the documentation on which welfare depends; the owners state the shared structure as recognise identity, then prohibit discrimination, then deliver welfare, and they warn against homogenising the two groups because a transgender person can be socially visible while legally marginalised whereas a nomadic family can be administratively invisible because classifications, documents and State lists are fragmented. The audited routing ledgers route no General Studies Mains demand and no objective demand to this owner, so the package solves none and says so plainly instead of inventing one.

Answer: B. Explanation: The owners set out the invisibility chain in order: no central statutory list of these communities exists, so communities appear on different State lists or on none, fragmenting eligibility; nomadic and semi-nomadic ways of life mean families lack a fixed address, preventing issue of a ration card, Aadhaar seeding and a caste certificate in many States; and without documentation families cannot access the health-assurance, food-security or income-support schemes for which they are otherwise among the neediest. The owners add the migration case in which a community listed in one State moves to another where it is not listed and loses eligibility, and the overlap case in which a partially settled community holding backward-class status in a State may gain that reservation while losing scheme-specific benefits. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q71. Which option preserves the source-bounded meaning of The documentation barrier that a dedicated scheme cannot remove?

A. This owner holds two distinct populations that the repository joins by one analytical thread rather than by one identity: transgender persons, whose claim is recognition of a self-perceived gender, and Denotified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic communities, whose claim is release from a colonial criminal label and entry into the documentation on which welfare depends; the owners state the shared structure as recognise identity, then prohibit discrimination, then deliver welfare, and they warn against homogenising the two groups because a transgender person can be socially visible while legally marginalised whereas a nomadic family can be administratively invisible because classifications, documents and State lists are fragmented. The audited routing ledgers route no General Studies Mains demand and no objective demand to this owner, so the package solves none and says so plainly instead of inventing one. B. The Transgender Persons (Protection of Rights) Act, 2019, with Rules notified in 2020, defines a transgender person as a person whose gender does not match the gender assigned at birth, and the owners record that the definition expressly includes trans-men, trans-women, persons with intersex variations, genderqueer persons and persons with socio-cultural identities such as kinnar, hijra, aravani and jogta; the examinable point is that the statute uses an inclusive enumeration rather than a single medicalised test, so an answer that reduces the category to one community or to a surgical status has narrowed the definition Parliament actually enacted. C. The owners set out the invisibility chain in order: no central statutory list of these communities exists, so communities appear on different State lists or on none, fragmenting eligibility; nomadic and semi-nomadic ways of life mean families lack a fixed address, preventing issue of a ration card, Aadhaar seeding and a caste certificate in many States; and without documentation families cannot access the health-assurance, food-security or income-support schemes for which they are otherwise among the neediest. The owners add the migration case in which a community listed in one State moves to another where it is not listed and loses eligibility, and the overlap case in which a partially settled community holding backward-class status in a State may gain that reservation while losing scheme-specific benefits. D. The owners keep two certification routes apart. A District Magistrate issues the basic certificate recognising a person's self-perceived transgender identity, and no medical or surgical requirement applies to it. Section 7 separately permits a revised male or female certificate after medical intervention, which is an additional route and not a precondition for basic recognition. The distinction is the single most tested detail in this half of the topic, because an answer that says the Act requires surgery for recognition inverts the statutory scheme, and an answer that ignores Section 7 loses the reason critics describe the design as certificate-based rather than self-declaratory.

Answer: C. Explanation: The owners set out the invisibility chain in order: no central statutory list of these communities exists, so communities appear on different State lists or on none, fragmenting eligibility; nomadic and semi-nomadic ways of life mean families lack a fixed address, preventing issue of a ration card, Aadhaar seeding and a caste certificate in many States; and without documentation families cannot access the health-assurance, food-security or income-support schemes for which they are otherwise among the neediest. The owners add the migration case in which a community listed in one State moves to another where it is not listed and loses eligibility, and the overlap case in which a partially settled community holding backward-class status in a State may gain that reservation while losing scheme-specific benefits. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q72. Which statement avoids a close-option trap about The documentation barrier that a dedicated scheme cannot remove?

A. The owners record NALSA v. Union of India, decided by the Supreme Court in 2014, as the judgment recognising transgender persons' right to a self-identified gender under Articles 14, 15 and 21, directing welfare measures and directing that the government treat transgender persons as socially and educationally backward and consider extending backward-class benefits; the owners also record, as an advanced point, that the 2019 Act did not fully adopt that direction, and they instruct that no uniform national horizontal-reservation rule be invented, because the status of such claims remains a State and litigation question rather than a settled statutory entitlement. B. The owners keep two certification routes apart. A District Magistrate issues the basic certificate recognising a person's self-perceived transgender identity, and no medical or surgical requirement applies to it. Section 7 separately permits a revised male or female certificate after medical intervention, which is an additional route and not a precondition for basic recognition. The distinction is the single most tested detail in this half of the topic, because an answer that says the Act requires surgery for recognition inverts the statutory scheme, and an answer that ignores Section 7 loses the reason critics describe the design as certificate-based rather than self-declaratory. C. The Transgender Persons (Protection of Rights) Act, 2019, with Rules notified in 2020, defines a transgender person as a person whose gender does not match the gender assigned at birth, and the owners record that the definition expressly includes trans-men, trans-women, persons with intersex variations, genderqueer persons and persons with socio-cultural identities such as kinnar, hijra, aravani and jogta; the examinable point is that the statute uses an inclusive enumeration rather than a single medicalised test, so an answer that reduces the category to one community or to a surgical status has narrowed the definition Parliament actually enacted. D. The owners set out the invisibility chain in order: no central statutory list of these communities exists, so communities appear on different State lists or on none, fragmenting eligibility; nomadic and semi-nomadic ways of life mean families lack a fixed address, preventing issue of a ration card, Aadhaar seeding and a caste certificate in many States; and without documentation families cannot access the health-assurance, food-security or income-support schemes for which they are otherwise among the neediest. The owners add the migration case in which a community listed in one State moves to another where it is not listed and loses eligibility, and the overlap case in which a partially settled community holding backward-class status in a State may gain that reservation while losing scheme-specific benefits.

Answer: D. Explanation: The owners set out the invisibility chain in order: no central statutory list of these communities exists, so communities appear on different State lists or on none, fragmenting eligibility; nomadic and semi-nomadic ways of life mean families lack a fixed address, preventing issue of a ration card, Aadhaar seeding and a caste certificate in many States; and without documentation families cannot access the health-assurance, food-security or income-support schemes for which they are otherwise among the neediest. The owners add the migration case in which a community listed in one State moves to another where it is not listed and loses eligibility, and the overlap case in which a partially settled community holding backward-class status in a State may gain that reservation while losing scheme-specific benefits. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q73. Which statement correctly identifies The trade-offs the owners state against their own remedies?

A. The owners refuse a one-sided reform list. Certificate-based recognition secures official documentation but introduces a bureaucratic gate that critics argue weakens the self-determination principle the 2014 judgment affirmed. A dedicated scheme for denotified communities delivers targeted support but risks building a separate welfare silo instead of mainstreaming these communities into larger existing programmes. Advisory bodies such as the Board and the National Council avoid quasi-judicial complexity but lack enforcement teeth. The recommended corrections are a permanent statutory commission on the model of the existing constitutional commissions, a central list on the model of the central backward-class list, documentation camps for nomadic families, sensitisation and a dedicated enforcement route. B. The audited 2018-2023 and 2024-2025 Mains routing ledgers route no General Studies question to this owner, the audited 2018-2023, 2024-2025 and 2026 Prelims routing ledgers route no objective question to it, and both the Basic and the Advanced owner state independently that no direct General Studies Paper II Mains question in the audited 2024-2025 papers names transgender persons or these communities. The package therefore records a transparent zero rather than claiming a route, treats the probable questions carried by the owners as anticipated framing rather than as previous-year questions, and supplies six original Mains answers and eighty original objective questions in their place; the outcome measure the owners prescribe is livelihood integration, educational attainment and freedom from discrimination rather than a certificate or enrolment count. C. The Transgender Persons (Protection of Rights) Act, 2019, with Rules notified in 2020, defines a transgender person as a person whose gender does not match the gender assigned at birth, and the owners record that the definition expressly includes trans-men, trans-women, persons with intersex variations, genderqueer persons and persons with socio-cultural identities such as kinnar, hijra, aravani and jogta; the examinable point is that the statute uses an inclusive enumeration rather than a single medicalised test, so an answer that reduces the category to one community or to a surgical status has narrowed the definition Parliament actually enacted. D. This owner holds two distinct populations that the repository joins by one analytical thread rather than by one identity: transgender persons, whose claim is recognition of a self-perceived gender, and Denotified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic communities, whose claim is release from a colonial criminal label and entry into the documentation on which welfare depends; the owners state the shared structure as recognise identity, then prohibit discrimination, then deliver welfare, and they warn against homogenising the two groups because a transgender person can be socially visible while legally marginalised whereas a nomadic family can be administratively invisible because classifications, documents and State lists are fragmented. The audited routing ledgers route no General Studies Mains demand and no objective demand to this owner, so the package solves none and says so plainly instead of inventing one.

Answer: A. Explanation: The owners refuse a one-sided reform list. Certificate-based recognition secures official documentation but introduces a bureaucratic gate that critics argue weakens the self-determination principle the 2014 judgment affirmed. A dedicated scheme for denotified communities delivers targeted support but risks building a separate welfare silo instead of mainstreaming these communities into larger existing programmes. Advisory bodies such as the Board and the National Council avoid quasi-judicial complexity but lack enforcement teeth. The recommended corrections are a permanent statutory commission on the model of the existing constitutional commissions, a central list on the model of the central backward-class list, documentation camps for nomadic families, sensitisation and a dedicated enforcement route. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q74. Which chronology card should be filed under The trade-offs the owners state against their own remedies?

A. This owner holds two distinct populations that the repository joins by one analytical thread rather than by one identity: transgender persons, whose claim is recognition of a self-perceived gender, and Denotified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic communities, whose claim is release from a colonial criminal label and entry into the documentation on which welfare depends; the owners state the shared structure as recognise identity, then prohibit discrimination, then deliver welfare, and they warn against homogenising the two groups because a transgender person can be socially visible while legally marginalised whereas a nomadic family can be administratively invisible because classifications, documents and State lists are fragmented. The audited routing ledgers route no General Studies Mains demand and no objective demand to this owner, so the package solves none and says so plainly instead of inventing one. B. The owners refuse a one-sided reform list. Certificate-based recognition secures official documentation but introduces a bureaucratic gate that critics argue weakens the self-determination principle the 2014 judgment affirmed. A dedicated scheme for denotified communities delivers targeted support but risks building a separate welfare silo instead of mainstreaming these communities into larger existing programmes. Advisory bodies such as the Board and the National Council avoid quasi-judicial complexity but lack enforcement teeth. The recommended corrections are a permanent statutory commission on the model of the existing constitutional commissions, a central list on the model of the central backward-class list, documentation camps for nomadic families, sensitisation and a dedicated enforcement route. C. The owners keep two certification routes apart. A District Magistrate issues the basic certificate recognising a person's self-perceived transgender identity, and no medical or surgical requirement applies to it. Section 7 separately permits a revised male or female certificate after medical intervention, which is an additional route and not a precondition for basic recognition. The distinction is the single most tested detail in this half of the topic, because an answer that says the Act requires surgery for recognition inverts the statutory scheme, and an answer that ignores Section 7 loses the reason critics describe the design as certificate-based rather than self-declaratory. D. The Transgender Persons (Protection of Rights) Act, 2019, with Rules notified in 2020, defines a transgender person as a person whose gender does not match the gender assigned at birth, and the owners record that the definition expressly includes trans-men, trans-women, persons with intersex variations, genderqueer persons and persons with socio-cultural identities such as kinnar, hijra, aravani and jogta; the examinable point is that the statute uses an inclusive enumeration rather than a single medicalised test, so an answer that reduces the category to one community or to a surgical status has narrowed the definition Parliament actually enacted.

Answer: B. Explanation: The owners refuse a one-sided reform list. Certificate-based recognition secures official documentation but introduces a bureaucratic gate that critics argue weakens the self-determination principle the 2014 judgment affirmed. A dedicated scheme for denotified communities delivers targeted support but risks building a separate welfare silo instead of mainstreaming these communities into larger existing programmes. Advisory bodies such as the Board and the National Council avoid quasi-judicial complexity but lack enforcement teeth. The recommended corrections are a permanent statutory commission on the model of the existing constitutional commissions, a central list on the model of the central backward-class list, documentation camps for nomadic families, sensitisation and a dedicated enforcement route. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q75. Which option preserves the source-bounded meaning of The trade-offs the owners state against their own remedies?

A. The owners keep two certification routes apart. A District Magistrate issues the basic certificate recognising a person's self-perceived transgender identity, and no medical or surgical requirement applies to it. Section 7 separately permits a revised male or female certificate after medical intervention, which is an additional route and not a precondition for basic recognition. The distinction is the single most tested detail in this half of the topic, because an answer that says the Act requires surgery for recognition inverts the statutory scheme, and an answer that ignores Section 7 loses the reason critics describe the design as certificate-based rather than self-declaratory. B. The Transgender Persons (Protection of Rights) Act, 2019, with Rules notified in 2020, defines a transgender person as a person whose gender does not match the gender assigned at birth, and the owners record that the definition expressly includes trans-men, trans-women, persons with intersex variations, genderqueer persons and persons with socio-cultural identities such as kinnar, hijra, aravani and jogta; the examinable point is that the statute uses an inclusive enumeration rather than a single medicalised test, so an answer that reduces the category to one community or to a surgical status has narrowed the definition Parliament actually enacted. C. The owners refuse a one-sided reform list. Certificate-based recognition secures official documentation but introduces a bureaucratic gate that critics argue weakens the self-determination principle the 2014 judgment affirmed. A dedicated scheme for denotified communities delivers targeted support but risks building a separate welfare silo instead of mainstreaming these communities into larger existing programmes. Advisory bodies such as the Board and the National Council avoid quasi-judicial complexity but lack enforcement teeth. The recommended corrections are a permanent statutory commission on the model of the existing constitutional commissions, a central list on the model of the central backward-class list, documentation camps for nomadic families, sensitisation and a dedicated enforcement route. D. The owners record NALSA v. Union of India, decided by the Supreme Court in 2014, as the judgment recognising transgender persons' right to a self-identified gender under Articles 14, 15 and 21, directing welfare measures and directing that the government treat transgender persons as socially and educationally backward and consider extending backward-class benefits; the owners also record, as an advanced point, that the 2019 Act did not fully adopt that direction, and they instruct that no uniform national horizontal-reservation rule be invented, because the status of such claims remains a State and litigation question rather than a settled statutory entitlement.

Answer: C. Explanation: The owners refuse a one-sided reform list. Certificate-based recognition secures official documentation but introduces a bureaucratic gate that critics argue weakens the self-determination principle the 2014 judgment affirmed. A dedicated scheme for denotified communities delivers targeted support but risks building a separate welfare silo instead of mainstreaming these communities into larger existing programmes. Advisory bodies such as the Board and the National Council avoid quasi-judicial complexity but lack enforcement teeth. The recommended corrections are a permanent statutory commission on the model of the existing constitutional commissions, a central list on the model of the central backward-class list, documentation camps for nomadic families, sensitisation and a dedicated enforcement route. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q76. Which statement avoids a close-option trap about The trade-offs the owners state against their own remedies?

A. The owners keep two certification routes apart. A District Magistrate issues the basic certificate recognising a person's self-perceived transgender identity, and no medical or surgical requirement applies to it. Section 7 separately permits a revised male or female certificate after medical intervention, which is an additional route and not a precondition for basic recognition. The distinction is the single most tested detail in this half of the topic, because an answer that says the Act requires surgery for recognition inverts the statutory scheme, and an answer that ignores Section 7 loses the reason critics describe the design as certificate-based rather than self-declaratory. B. The owners record NALSA v. Union of India, decided by the Supreme Court in 2014, as the judgment recognising transgender persons' right to a self-identified gender under Articles 14, 15 and 21, directing welfare measures and directing that the government treat transgender persons as socially and educationally backward and consider extending backward-class benefits; the owners also record, as an advanced point, that the 2019 Act did not fully adopt that direction, and they instruct that no uniform national horizontal-reservation rule be invented, because the status of such claims remains a State and litigation question rather than a settled statutory entitlement. C. The owners insist on separating legal authorities that answers routinely blur. NALSA is a judicial directive resting on constitutional articles, broader in principle and including the backward-class consideration; the 2019 Act is Parliament's statutory response, narrower and more procedural, supplying a certificate mechanism, specific prohibitions and named institutions. They differ in legal authority, in scope and in the way each is enforced, so an answer that treats a court direction and an enacted section as interchangeable has confused the source of the obligation it is asserting. D. The owners refuse a one-sided reform list. Certificate-based recognition secures official documentation but introduces a bureaucratic gate that critics argue weakens the self-determination principle the 2014 judgment affirmed. A dedicated scheme for denotified communities delivers targeted support but risks building a separate welfare silo instead of mainstreaming these communities into larger existing programmes. Advisory bodies such as the Board and the National Council avoid quasi-judicial complexity but lack enforcement teeth. The recommended corrections are a permanent statutory commission on the model of the existing constitutional commissions, a central list on the model of the central backward-class list, documentation camps for nomadic families, sensitisation and a dedicated enforcement route.

Answer: D. Explanation: The owners refuse a one-sided reform list. Certificate-based recognition secures official documentation but introduces a bureaucratic gate that critics argue weakens the self-determination principle the 2014 judgment affirmed. A dedicated scheme for denotified communities delivers targeted support but risks building a separate welfare silo instead of mainstreaming these communities into larger existing programmes. Advisory bodies such as the Board and the National Council avoid quasi-judicial complexity but lack enforcement teeth. The recommended corrections are a permanent statutory commission on the model of the existing constitutional commissions, a central list on the model of the central backward-class list, documentation camps for nomadic families, sensitisation and a dedicated enforcement route. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q77. Which statement correctly identifies How the previous-year record is stated for this owner?

A. The audited 2018-2023 and 2024-2025 Mains routing ledgers route no General Studies question to this owner, the audited 2018-2023, 2024-2025 and 2026 Prelims routing ledgers route no objective question to it, and both the Basic and the Advanced owner state independently that no direct General Studies Paper II Mains question in the audited 2024-2025 papers names transgender persons or these communities. The package therefore records a transparent zero rather than claiming a route, treats the probable questions carried by the owners as anticipated framing rather than as previous-year questions, and supplies six original Mains answers and eighty original objective questions in their place; the outcome measure the owners prescribe is livelihood integration, educational attainment and freedom from discrimination rather than a certificate or enrolment count. B. This owner holds two distinct populations that the repository joins by one analytical thread rather than by one identity: transgender persons, whose claim is recognition of a self-perceived gender, and Denotified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic communities, whose claim is release from a colonial criminal label and entry into the documentation on which welfare depends; the owners state the shared structure as recognise identity, then prohibit discrimination, then deliver welfare, and they warn against homogenising the two groups because a transgender person can be socially visible while legally marginalised whereas a nomadic family can be administratively invisible because classifications, documents and State lists are fragmented. The audited routing ledgers route no General Studies Mains demand and no objective demand to this owner, so the package solves none and says so plainly instead of inventing one. C. The owners keep two certification routes apart.

A District Magistrate issues the basic certificate recognising a person's self-perceived transgender identity, and no medical or surgical requirement applies to it. Section 7 separately permits a revised male or female certificate after medical intervention, which is an additional route and not a precondition for basic recognition. The distinction is the single most tested detail in this half of the topic, because an answer that says the Act requires surgery for recognition inverts the statutory scheme, and an answer that ignores Section 7 loses the reason critics describe the design as certificate-based rather than self-declaratory. D. The Transgender Persons (Protection of Rights) Act, 2019, with Rules notified in 2020, defines a transgender person as a person whose gender does not match the gender assigned at birth, and the owners record that the definition expressly includes trans-men, trans-women, persons with intersex variations, genderqueer persons and persons with socio-cultural identities such as kinnar, hijra, aravani and jogta; the examinable point is that the statute uses an inclusive enumeration rather than a single medicalised test, so an answer that reduces the category to one community or to a surgical status has narrowed the definition Parliament actually enacted.

Answer: A. Explanation: The audited 2018-2023 and 2024-2025 Mains routing ledgers route no General Studies question to this owner, the audited 2018-2023, 2024-2025 and 2026 Prelims routing ledgers route no objective question to it, and both the Basic and the Advanced owner state independently that no direct General Studies Paper II Mains question in the audited 2024-2025 papers names transgender persons or these communities. The package therefore records a transparent zero rather than claiming a route, treats the probable questions carried by the owners as anticipated framing rather than as previous-year questions, and supplies six original Mains answers and eighty original objective questions in their place; the outcome measure the owners prescribe is livelihood integration, educational attainment and freedom from discrimination rather than a certificate or enrolment count. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q78. Which chronology card should be filed under How the previous-year record is stated for this owner?

A. The owners record NALSA v. Union of India, decided by the Supreme Court in 2014, as the judgment recognising transgender persons' right to a self-identified gender under Articles 14, 15 and 21, directing welfare measures and directing that the government treat transgender persons as socially and educationally backward and consider extending backward-class benefits; the owners also record, as an advanced point, that the 2019 Act did not fully adopt that direction, and they instruct that no uniform national horizontal-reservation rule be invented, because the status of such claims remains a State and litigation question rather than a settled statutory entitlement. B. The audited 2018-2023 and 2024-2025 Mains routing ledgers route no General Studies question to this owner, the audited 2018-2023, 2024-2025 and 2026 Prelims routing ledgers route no objective question to it, and both the Basic and the Advanced owner state independently that no direct General Studies Paper II Mains question in the audited 2024-2025 papers names transgender persons or these communities. The package therefore records a transparent zero rather than claiming a route, treats the probable questions carried by the owners as anticipated framing rather than as previous-year questions, and supplies six original Mains answers and eighty original objective questions in their place; the outcome measure the owners prescribe is livelihood integration, educational attainment and freedom from discrimination rather than a certificate or enrolment count. C. The owners keep two certification routes apart. A District Magistrate issues the basic certificate recognising a person's self-perceived transgender identity, and no medical or surgical requirement applies to it. Section 7 separately permits a revised male or female certificate after medical intervention, which is an additional route and not a precondition for basic recognition. The distinction is the single most tested detail in this half of the topic, because an answer that says the Act requires surgery for recognition inverts the statutory scheme, and an answer that ignores Section 7 loses the reason critics describe the design as certificate-based rather than self-declaratory. D. The Transgender Persons (Protection of Rights) Act, 2019, with Rules notified in 2020, defines a transgender person as a person whose gender does not match the gender assigned at birth, and the owners record that the definition expressly includes trans-men, trans-women, persons with intersex variations, genderqueer persons and persons with socio-cultural identities such as kinnar, hijra, aravani and jogta; the examinable point is that the statute uses an inclusive enumeration rather than a single medicalised test, so an answer that reduces the category to one community or to a surgical status has narrowed the definition Parliament actually enacted.

Answer: B. Explanation: The audited 2018-2023 and 2024-2025 Mains routing ledgers route no General Studies question to this owner, the audited 2018-2023, 2024-2025 and 2026 Prelims routing ledgers route no objective question to it, and both the Basic and the Advanced owner state independently that no direct General Studies Paper II Mains question in the audited 2024-2025 papers names transgender persons or these communities. The package therefore records a transparent zero rather than claiming a route, treats the probable questions carried by the owners as anticipated framing rather than as previous-year questions, and supplies six original Mains answers and eighty original objective questions in their place; the outcome measure the owners prescribe is livelihood integration, educational attainment and freedom from discrimination rather than a certificate or enrolment count. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q79. Which option preserves the source-bounded meaning of How the previous-year record is stated for this owner?

A. The owners keep two certification routes apart. A District Magistrate issues the basic certificate recognising a person's self-perceived transgender identity, and no medical or surgical requirement applies to it. Section 7 separately permits a revised male or female certificate after medical intervention, which is an additional route and not a precondition for basic recognition. The distinction is the single most tested detail in this half of the topic, because an answer that says the Act requires surgery for recognition inverts the statutory scheme, and an answer that ignores Section 7 loses the reason critics describe the design as certificate-based rather than self-declaratory. B. The owners record NALSA v. Union of India, decided by the Supreme Court in 2014, as the judgment recognising transgender persons' right to a self-identified gender under Articles 14, 15 and 21, directing welfare measures and directing that the government treat transgender persons as socially and educationally backward and consider extending backward-class benefits; the owners also record, as an advanced point, that the 2019 Act did not fully adopt that direction, and they instruct that no uniform national horizontal-reservation rule be invented, because the status of such claims remains a State and litigation question rather than a settled statutory entitlement. C. The audited 2018-2023 and 2024-2025 Mains routing ledgers route no General Studies question to this owner, the audited 2018-2023, 2024-2025 and 2026 Prelims routing ledgers route no objective question to it, and both the Basic and the Advanced owner state independently that no direct General Studies Paper II Mains question in the audited 2024-2025 papers names transgender persons or these communities. The package therefore records a transparent zero rather than claiming a route, treats the probable questions carried by the owners as anticipated framing rather than as previous-year questions, and supplies six original Mains answers and eighty original objective questions in their place; the outcome measure the owners prescribe is livelihood integration, educational attainment and freedom from discrimination rather than a certificate or enrolment count. D. The owners insist on separating legal authorities that answers routinely blur. NALSA is a judicial directive resting on constitutional articles, broader in principle and including the backward-class consideration; the 2019 Act is Parliament's statutory response, narrower and more procedural, supplying a certificate mechanism, specific prohibitions and named institutions. They differ in legal authority, in scope and in the way each is enforced, so an answer that treats a court direction and an enacted section as interchangeable has confused the source of the obligation it is asserting.

Answer: C. Explanation: The audited 2018-2023 and 2024-2025 Mains routing ledgers route no General Studies question to this owner, the audited 2018-2023, 2024-2025 and 2026 Prelims routing ledgers route no objective question to it, and both the Basic and the Advanced owner state independently that no direct General Studies Paper II Mains question in the audited 2024-2025 papers names transgender persons or these communities. The package therefore records a transparent zero rather than claiming a route, treats the probable questions carried by the owners as anticipated framing rather than as previous-year questions, and supplies six original Mains answers and eighty original objective questions in their place; the outcome measure the owners prescribe is livelihood integration, educational attainment and freedom from discrimination rather than a certificate or enrolment count. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

Q80. Which statement avoids a close-option trap about How the previous-year record is stated for this owner?

A. The owners record NALSA v. Union of India, decided by the Supreme Court in 2014, as the judgment recognising transgender persons' right to a self-identified gender under Articles 14, 15 and 21, directing welfare measures and directing that the government treat transgender persons as socially and educationally backward and consider extending backward-class benefits; the owners also record, as an advanced point, that the 2019 Act did not fully adopt that direction, and they instruct that no uniform national horizontal-reservation rule be invented, because the status of such claims remains a State and litigation question rather than a settled statutory entitlement. B. The owners record that the 2019 Act prohibits discrimination against a transgender person in education, employment, healthcare, access to goods, facilities and public services, and the right to reside with family, and that it creates offences for specific harms including sexual abuse, denial of access to a public place and eviction; they record that an establishment must designate a complaint officer to deal with complaints. They then attach the qualification that a formal complaint route is not the same as accessible enforcement, because awareness, independence and effective remedy remain weak, which is why Section 3 is a starting point for an answer rather than its conclusion. C. The owners insist on separating legal authorities that answers routinely blur. NALSA is a judicial directive resting on constitutional articles, broader in principle and including the backward-class consideration; the 2019 Act is Parliament's statutory response, narrower and more procedural, supplying a certificate mechanism, specific prohibitions and named institutions. They differ in legal authority, in scope and in the way each is enforced, so an answer that treats a court direction and an enacted section as interchangeable has confused the source of the obligation it is asserting. D. The audited 2018-2023 and 2024-2025 Mains routing ledgers route no General Studies question to this owner, the audited 2018-2023, 2024-2025 and 2026 Prelims routing ledgers route no objective question to it, and both the Basic and the Advanced owner state independently that no direct General Studies Paper II Mains question in the audited 2024-2025 papers names transgender persons or these communities. The package therefore records a transparent zero rather than claiming a route, treats the probable questions carried by the owners as anticipated framing rather than as previous-year questions, and supplies six original Mains answers and eighty original objective questions in their place; the outcome measure the owners prescribe is livelihood integration, educational attainment and freedom from discrimination rather than a certificate or enrolment count.

Answer: D. Explanation: The audited 2018-2023 and 2024-2025 Mains routing ledgers route no General Studies question to this owner, the audited 2018-2023, 2024-2025 and 2026 Prelims routing ledgers route no objective question to it, and both the Basic and the Advanced owner state independently that no direct General Studies Paper II Mains question in the audited 2024-2025 papers names transgender persons or these communities. The package therefore records a transparent zero rather than claiming a route, treats the probable questions carried by the owners as anticipated framing rather than as previous-year questions, and supplies six original Mains answers and eighty original objective questions in their place; the outcome measure the owners prescribe is livelihood integration, educational attainment and freedom from discrimination rather than a certificate or enrolment count. The remaining options belong to different chronology, actor or analytical categories.

PYQS AND ANSWER PRACTICE

TRANSPARENT ZERO-DIRECT-PYQ AUDIT

This owner's previous-year record is a transparent zero, and it is stated precisely rather than softened. The audited 2018-2023 Mains routing ledger and the audited 2024-2025 Mains routing ledger route no General Studies question to this owner, and the audited 2018-2023, 2024-2025 and 2026 Prelims routing ledgers route no objective question to it. Both the Basic and the Advanced owner state independently that no direct General Studies Paper II Mains question in the audited 2024-2025 papers names transgender persons or denotified, nomadic and semi-nomadic communities, and both describe the questions they carry as probable or anticipated framing; those anticipated questions are therefore not reproduced anywhere in this package as previous-year questions, and no year, paper, question number, directive, mark value or word limit is asserted for them. The 2021 General Studies Paper I demand on the gig economy and the empowerment of women, the 2024 General Studies Paper I demand on migration to large cities and the General Studies Paper IV case studies involving migrant workers are routed by the audited ledgers to other owners, so none of them is claimed here either. In place of a solved demand card, the package supplies six original Mains questions with model solutions and eighty original objective questions on a strict A -> B -> C -> D rotation, each model solution opening with its analytical claim so that the evidence which follows does argumentative rather than decorative work. The locally held OCR-searchable official General Studies papers were read only to confirm that no routed demand for this owner exists in them; no question was invented from them, no marking scheme or page precision was imported and no official answer key is claimed for any question anywhere in this package.

OWNER PYQ LEDGER EXTRACTS

9. PYQ application

- ANALYSIS: No direct GS-II Mains PYQ in 2024-2025 on this topic. The recognitive-justice framing (Topic 01) and the rights-vs-welfare distinction are transferable to any future question on marginalised-identity-based welfare.

10. PYQ-based analytical application

- ANALYSIS: No direct PYQ; apply the recognitive-justice framework (Topic 01) to any future question: (1) identify the identity/dignity denial, (2) trace the statutory/policy response, (3) diagnose the implementation gap, (4) recommend enforcement or documentation correction.

ORIGINAL MAINS 1 - 10 MARKS

Question: Examine the recognition and anti-discrimination provisions of the Transgender Persons (Protection of Rights) Act, 2019, and assess how far they convert recognition into access. Answer in about 150 words.

Model thesis: Claim: the 2019 Act converts a constitutional recognition into an administrable one, and its adequacy therefore turns on the gate it created rather than on the definition it adopted, because the definition is inclusive while the certificate is discretionary and the prohibition is enforced through a route that is formal rather than accessible. Named evidence: the inclusive statutory definition, the District Magistrate certificate on self-perceived identity, the separate Section 7 route after medical intervention, the prohibition of discrimination in education, employment, healthcare, public services and residence with family, the offences created for sexual abuse, denial of public access and eviction, the establishment complaint officer, and the advisory National Council chaired by the Union Minister. Analysis: recognition is delivered by an official exercising administrative judgement, so sensitisation deficits translate directly into delay, discretionary rejection and invasive questioning, and a prohibition without an independent local enforcement agency leaves the person who holds the certificate with a right and no forum. Qualification: the Act should be graded as a substantial advance on recognition and a weak advance on remedy, and the answer must not assert a national horizontal-reservation entitlement, which the owners record as unsettled.

Claim -> named evidence -> analysis -> qualification:

- The Transgender Persons (Protection of Rights) Act, 2019, with Rules notified in 2020, defines a transgender person as a person whose gender does not match the gender assigned at birth, and the owners record that the definition expressly includes trans-men, trans-women, persons with intersex variations, genderqueer persons and persons with socio-cultural identities such as kinnar, hijra, aravani and jogta; the examinable point is that the statute uses an inclusive enumeration rather than a single medicalised test, so an answer that reduces the category to one community or to a surgical status has narrowed the definition Parliament actually enacted.
- The owners keep two certification routes apart. A District Magistrate issues the basic certificate recognising a person's self-perceived transgender identity, and no medical or surgical requirement applies to it. Section 7 separately permits a revised male or female certificate after medical intervention, which is an additional route and not a precondition for basic recognition. The distinction is the single most tested detail in this half of the topic, because an answer that says the Act requires surgery for recognition inverts the statutory scheme, and an answer that ignores Section 7 loses the reason critics describe the design as certificate-based rather than self-declaratory.
- The owners record that the 2019 Act prohibits discrimination against a transgender person in education, employment, healthcare, access to goods, facilities and public services, and the right to reside with family, and that it creates offences for specific harms including sexual abuse, denial of access to a public place and eviction; they record that an establishment must designate a complaint officer to deal with complaints. They then attach the qualification that a formal complaint route is not the same as accessible enforcement, because awareness, independence and effective remedy remain weak, which is why Section 3 is a starting point for an answer rather than its conclusion.

- The owners record the National Council for Transgender Persons as the body created under the 2019 Act, chaired by the Union Minister for Social Justice and Empowerment and including transgender community representatives, State nominees and ministry officials; they record its function as advisory and record expressly that it lacks quasi-judicial or enforcement powers. The examinable contrast is with a commission that can receive complaints, hold inquiries and issue binding directions, and the owners use that contrast to explain why declaration-stage recognition can coexist with delivery-stage failure.
- The owners record the first implementation failure at the counter rather than in the text: District Magistrates may lack sensitisation, so the certificate process can produce delays, discretionary rejections or invasive questioning. They describe the consequence precisely, that a statute resting on self-perceived identity is delivered through an official who exercises administrative judgement, which is why critics argue the design bureaucratises identity even though it does not medicalise the basic certificate; the analytical move is to locate the failure at the discretionary gate rather than in the definition.
- The owners set out the rest of the transgender failure chain in order: the complaint-officer route exists but awareness, independence and effective remedy are weak; Garima Greh coverage is limited in number and spread; and skill training exists without strong formal-employment linkage. They add the illustration of a person who holds a District Magistrate certificate in a smaller town and still faces housing discrimination with no local enforcement agency to approach, which converts an abstract enforcement gap into a locatable administrative absence that an answer can name.

Qualified conclusion: Claim: the 2019 Act converts a constitutional recognition into an administrable one, and its adequacy therefore turns on the gate it created rather than on the definition it adopted, because the definition is inclusive while the certificate is discretionary and the prohibition is enforced through a route that is formal rather than accessible. Named evidence: the inclusive statutory definition, the District Magistrate certificate on self-perceived identity, the separate Section 7 route after medical intervention, the prohibition of discrimination in education, employment, healthcare, public services and residence with family, the offences created for sexual abuse, denial of public access and eviction, the establishment complaint officer, and the advisory National Council chaired by the Union Minister. Analysis: recognition is delivered by an official exercising administrative judgement, so sensitisation deficits translate directly into delay, discretionary rejection and invasive questioning, and a prohibition without an independent local enforcement agency leaves the person who holds the certificate with a right and no forum. Qualification: the Act should be graded as a substantial advance on recognition and a weak advance on remedy, and the answer must not assert a national horizontal-reservation entitlement, which the owners record as unsettled.

ORIGINAL MAINS 2 - 10 MARKS

Question: Distinguish the constitutional recognition in NALSA v. Union of India from the statutory scheme of the 2019 Act, and explain why the distinction matters in an answer. Answer in about 150 words.

Model thesis: Claim: the two instruments differ in authority, scope and enforceability, and collapsing them produces a status error that no amount of later argument repairs. Named evidence: the 2014 judgment recognising the right to a self-identified gender under Articles 14, 15 and 21, directing welfare measures and directing that transgender persons be treated as socially and educationally backward with backward-class benefits considered; the 2019 Act with Rules of 2020 supplying the certificate mechanism, the prohibitions and the advisory Council; and the owners' record that the Act did not fully adopt the backward-class direction. Analysis: a judicial directive rests on constitutional articles and binds through the Court's authority, while a statute supplies procedure, institutions and offences, so the gap between them is exactly where the backward-class question and the self-declaration question now sit. Qualification: the answer should present the Act as an implementation that is narrower than the judgment rather than as its codification, and should not convert an unadopted direction into a current entitlement.

Claim -> named evidence -> analysis -> qualification:

- The owners record NALSA v. Union of India, decided by the Supreme Court in 2014, as the judgment recognising transgender persons' right to a self-identified gender under Articles 14, 15 and 21, directing welfare measures and directing that the government treat transgender persons as socially and educationally backward and consider extending backward-class benefits; the owners also record, as an advanced point, that the 2019 Act did not fully adopt that direction, and they instruct that no uniform national horizontal-reservation rule be invented, because the status of such claims remains a State and litigation question rather than a settled statutory entitlement.

- The owners insist on separating legal authorities that answers routinely blur. NALSA is a judicial directive resting on constitutional articles, broader in principle and including the backward-class consideration; the 2019 Act is Parliament's statutory response, narrower and more procedural, supplying a certificate mechanism, specific prohibitions and named institutions. They differ in legal authority, in scope and in the way each is enforced, so an answer that treats a court direction and an enacted section as interchangeable has confused the source of the obligation it is asserting.
- The Transgender Persons (Protection of Rights) Act, 2019, with Rules notified in 2020, defines a transgender person as a person whose gender does not match the gender assigned at birth, and the owners record that the definition expressly includes trans-men, trans-women, persons with intersex variations, genderqueer persons and persons with socio-cultural identities such as kinnar, hijra, aravani and jogta; the examinable point is that the statute uses an inclusive enumeration rather than a single medicalised test, so an answer that reduces the category to one community or to a surgical status has narrowed the definition Parliament actually enacted.
- The owners keep two certification routes apart. A District Magistrate issues the basic certificate recognising a person's self-perceived transgender identity, and no medical or surgical requirement applies to it. Section 7 separately permits a revised male or female certificate after medical intervention, which is an additional route and not a precondition for basic recognition. The distinction is the single most tested detail in this half of the topic, because an answer that says the Act requires surgery for recognition inverts the statutory scheme, and an answer that ignores Section 7 loses the reason critics describe the design as certificate-based rather than self-declaratory.

Qualified conclusion: Claim: the two instruments differ in authority, scope and enforceability, and collapsing them produces a status error that no amount of later argument repairs. Named evidence: the 2014 judgment recognising the right to a self-identified gender under Articles 14, 15 and 21, directing welfare measures and directing that transgender persons be treated as socially and educationally backward with backward-class benefits considered; the 2019 Act with Rules of 2020 supplying the certificate mechanism, the prohibitions and the advisory Council; and the owners' record that the Act did not fully adopt the backward-class direction. Analysis: a judicial directive rests on constitutional articles and binds through the Court's authority, while a statute supplies procedure, institutions and offences, so the gap between them is exactly where the backward-class question and the self-declaration question now sit. Qualification: the answer should present the Act as an implementation that is narrower than the judgment rather than as its codification, and should not convert an unadopted direction into a current entitlement.

ORIGINAL MAINS 3 - 15 MARKS

Question: Critically examine the claim that recognitive justice for transgender persons in India has stopped at declaration without building delivery infrastructure. Answer in about 250 words.

Model thesis: Claim: the claim is largely sustained but must be stated as an institutional finding rather than as a dismissal of the statute, because the declaration stage is genuinely complete while the delivery stage lacks the agencies that would make the declaration operative. Named evidence: the inclusive definition and the certificate route; the prohibition across education, employment, healthcare, public services and residence; the establishment complaint officer; the advisory National Council without quasi-judicial or enforcement powers; SMILE with its transgender-welfare and begging-rehabilitation sub-schemes; Garima Greh shelters limited in number and spread; and the skill component whose linkage to formal employment remains weak because stigma persists in hiring. Analysis: each delivery failure has a distinct address, the certificate counter for recognition, the absent local forum for discrimination, the shelter map for safety and the hiring market for livelihood, and a policy answer that treats them as one generalised implementation weakness cannot prescribe a correction. Qualification: the claim should be graded as accurate on remedy and shelter and only partly accurate on recognition, because the certificate route does exist and does function for many applicants.

Claim -> named evidence -> analysis -> qualification:

- The owners keep two certification routes apart. A District Magistrate issues the basic certificate recognising a person's self-perceived transgender identity, and no medical or surgical requirement applies to it. Section 7 separately permits a revised male or female certificate after medical intervention, which is an additional route and not a precondition for basic recognition. The distinction is the single most tested detail in this half of the topic, because an answer that says the Act requires surgery for recognition inverts the statutory scheme, and an answer that ignores Section 7 loses the reason critics describe the design as certificate-based rather than self-declaratory.

- The owners record that the 2019 Act prohibits discrimination against a transgender person in education, employment, healthcare, access to goods, facilities and public services, and the right to reside with family, and that it creates offences for specific harms including sexual abuse, denial of access to a public place and eviction; they record that an establishment must designate a complaint officer to deal with complaints. They then attach the qualification that a formal complaint route is not the same as accessible enforcement, because awareness, independence and effective remedy remain weak, which is why Section 3 is a starting point for an answer rather than its conclusion.
- The owners record the National Council for Transgender Persons as the body created under the 2019 Act, chaired by the Union Minister for Social Justice and Empowerment and including transgender community representatives, State nominees and ministry officials; they record its function as advisory and record expressly that it lacks quasi-judicial or enforcement powers. The examinable contrast is with a commission that can receive complaints, hold inquiries and issue binding directions, and the owners use that contrast to explain why declaration-stage recognition can coexist with delivery-stage failure.
- The owners record SMILE, administered by the Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment, as an umbrella with two distinct sub-schemes rather than a single transgender programme: a transgender-welfare sub-scheme covering Garima Greh shelters, skill development and health and counselling support, and a begging-rehabilitation sub-scheme covering a different target group under the same umbrella. The owners flag the reduction of SMILE to transgender welfare alone as a trap, because the umbrella structure and the two target groups are what an objective question is most likely to test.
- The owners record Garima Greh as the shelter-home component providing accommodation, food, medical care, skill training and recreation, and they immediately state the limit: shelters address immediate housing and safety needs but do not substitute for long-term economic integration, and their number and geographic spread are limited so that transgender persons outside major urban centres may lack access. The livelihood pathway is the skill-development component, and the owners record that its linkage to formal employment remains weak because stigma persists in hiring, so a shelter count is not evidence of integration.
- The owners record the first implementation failure at the counter rather than in the text: District Magistrates may lack sensitisation, so the certificate process can produce delays, discretionary rejections or invasive questioning. They describe the consequence precisely, that a statute resting on self-perceived identity is delivered through an official who exercises administrative judgement, which is why critics argue the design bureaucratises identity even though it does not medicalise the basic certificate; the analytical move is to locate the failure at the discretionary gate rather than in the definition.
- The owners set out the rest of the transgender failure chain in order: the complaint-officer route exists but awareness, independence and effective remedy are weak; Garima Greh coverage is limited in number and spread; and skill training exists without strong formal-employment linkage. They add the illustration of a person who holds a District Magistrate certificate in a smaller town and still faces housing discrimination with no local enforcement agency to approach, which converts an abstract enforcement gap into a locatable administrative absence that an answer can name.

Qualified conclusion: Claim: the claim is largely sustained but must be stated as an institutional finding rather than as a dismissal of the statute, because the declaration stage is genuinely complete while the delivery stage lacks the agencies that would make the declaration operative. Named evidence: the inclusive definition and the certificate route; the prohibition across education, employment, healthcare, public services and residence; the establishment complaint officer; the advisory National Council without quasi-judicial or enforcement powers; SMILE with its transgender-welfare and begging-rehabilitation sub-schemes; Garima Greh shelters limited in number and spread; and the skill component whose linkage to formal employment remains weak because stigma persists in hiring. Analysis: each delivery failure has a distinct address, the certificate counter for recognition, the absent local forum for discrimination, the shelter map for safety and the hiring market for livelihood, and a policy answer that treats them as one generalised implementation weakness cannot prescribe a correction. Qualification: the claim should be graded as accurate on remedy and shelter and only partly accurate on recognition, because the certificate route does exist and does function for many applicants.

ORIGINAL MAINS 4 - 15 MARKS

Question: Analyse the historical roots of the invisibility of Denotified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic communities and evaluate the adequacy of recent policy responses. Answer in about 250 words.

Model thesis: Claim: the invisibility is not a data accident but the residue of a statutory classification whose repeal removed the label without replacing it with an enumeration, so a welfare architecture that runs on lists cannot see communities that no list holds. Named evidence: the Criminal Tribes Act of 1871 with registration, surveillance and movement restriction, repealed in 1952 without rehabilitation; the recorded distinction between denotification and decriminalisation; the Renke Commission of 2008 and the Idate Commission of 2015 documenting stigma and welfare invisibility and recommending a permanent statutory commission and a comprehensive central list; the Development and Welfare Board constituted on 21 February 2019 that can recommend but cannot compel; and SEED launched on 16 February 2022 with free coaching, health-insurance facilitation, community livelihood initiatives and housing or land support. Analysis: the responses are correctly aimed at deprivation and wrongly sequenced against identification, because a dedicated scheme presupposes the documents and list membership that the same communities lack, which is why a family that migrates across a State boundary can lose eligibility without any change in its circumstances. Qualification: the evaluation should credit the Board and the scheme as real distributive instruments while recording that the recognitive instrument recommended in 2015 has not been enacted, and should avoid asserting any national population figure for these communities.

Claim -> named evidence -> analysis -> qualification:

- The owners record the Criminal Tribes Act, 1871, as colonial legislation that stigmatised entire communities as born criminals and subjected them to registration, surveillance and restriction of movement; they record that it was repealed in 1952. The examinable content is the mechanism rather than the label: the Act attached criminality to birth and community membership and enforced it through a register and police supervision, which is why its repeal removed a statutory instrument without removing the social identification it had created.
- The owners draw a distinction that objective questions exploit. Denotification in 1952 repealed the criminal-tribe label and removed the statutory classification; it did not provide rehabilitation and did not remove social stigma. Decriminalisation in the sense of a wrongful-conviction remedy would have implied a finding and a reparative consequence, and the owners record that this did not occur. An answer that says these communities were denotified because they were declared innocent has replaced the repeal of a statute with an exoneration that never happened.
- The owners define Denotified Tribes as communities denotified after the repeal of the 1871 Act, Nomadic Tribes as communities without fixed habitation that follow seasonal movement, and Semi-Nomadic Tribes as those partially settled, and they instruct that classifications and State-level lists vary and that no unsourced all-India population or community total should be used. They attach a parallel caution on the other half of the topic: Census 2011 recorded 4,87,803 people in the residual other sex category, which is often used as a transgender-population anchor but is incomplete because some transgender persons may have been recorded as male or female and the category was not identity-perfect.
- The owners record two commissions rather than one. The Renke Commission of 2008 and the Idate Commission of 2015 examined denotified, nomadic and semi-nomadic communities and documented historical stigma and welfare invisibility, while weak enumeration limits targeting. The owners record the Idate Commission by its full description as the National Commission for De-notified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Tribes chaired by Bhiku Ramji Idate, and record its key recommendations as a permanent statutory commission, a comprehensive central list of these communities and targeted welfare schemes.
- The owners record the Development and Welfare Board for De-notified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Communities, constituted on 21 February 2019 under the Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment, as a welfare Board that undertakes surveys, coordinates scheme implementation and advises on policy. They then state the institutional boundary that the topic turns on: it is not a statutory commission with quasi-judicial powers, it can recommend but cannot compel State action, and the permanent statutory commission recommended by the Idate Commission has not been enacted, so an answer that upgrades the Board into a commission has changed its legal character.
- The owners record the Scheme for Economic Empowerment of Denotified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Communities, launched on 16 February 2022, as a dedicated central scheme with four recorded components: free coaching, health-insurance facilitation including a route through the national health-assurance scheme, community livelihood initiatives and housing or land support. They immediately record its boundary, that it is not a comprehensive substitute for documents and State-list recognition and that its coverage remains nascent, so the scheme answers a distributive need while leaving the recognitive and documentary need open.

- The owners set out the invisibility chain in order: no central statutory list of these communities exists, so communities appear on different State lists or on none, fragmenting eligibility; nomadic and semi-nomadic ways of life mean families lack a fixed address, preventing issue of a ration card, Aadhaar seeding and a caste certificate in many States; and without documentation families cannot access the health-assurance, food-security or income-support schemes for which they are otherwise among the neediest. The owners add the migration case in which a community listed in one State moves to another where it is not listed and loses eligibility, and the overlap case in which a partially settled community holding backward-class status in a State may gain that reservation while losing scheme-specific benefits.

Qualified conclusion: Claim: the invisibility is not a data accident but the residue of a statutory classification whose repeal removed the label without replacing it with an enumeration, so a welfare architecture that runs on lists cannot see communities that no list holds. Named evidence: the Criminal Tribes Act of 1871 with registration, surveillance and movement restriction, repealed in 1952 without rehabilitation; the recorded distinction between denotification and decriminalisation; the Renke Commission of 2008 and the Idate Commission of 2015 documenting stigma and welfare invisibility and recommending a permanent statutory commission and a comprehensive central list; the Development and Welfare Board constituted on 21 February 2019 that can recommend but cannot compel; and SEED launched on 16 February 2022 with free coaching, health-insurance facilitation, community livelihood initiatives and housing or land support. Analysis: the responses are correctly aimed at deprivation and wrongly sequenced against identification, because a dedicated scheme presupposes the documents and list membership that the same communities lack, which is why a family that migrates across a State boundary can lose eligibility without any change in its circumstances. Qualification: the evaluation should credit the Board and the scheme as real distributive instruments while recording that the recognitive instrument recommended in 2015 has not been enacted, and should avoid asserting any national population figure for these communities.

ORIGINAL MAINS 5 - 20 MARKS

Question: Evaluate the proposition that transgender persons and Denotified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic communities share one failure mode of recognitive justice while requiring different remedies. Answer in about 300 words.

Model thesis: Claim: the proposition holds at the level of mechanism and fails at the level of prescription, because both groups are denied standing before the welfare state, but one is denied a forum after being recognised while the other is denied recognition before any forum becomes relevant. Named evidence: the inclusive statutory definition, the District Magistrate certificate and Section 7; the prohibition, the complaint officer and the advisory Council; SMILE, Garima Greh and the skill component; against the 1871 Act and its 1952 repeal, denotification distinguished from decriminalisation, the fragmented State lists and absent central list, the domicile barrier to a ration card, Aadhaar seeding and a caste certificate, the Board of 21 February 2019 and SEED of 16 February 2022. Analysis: for transgender persons the binding constraint is enforcement and stigma downstream of a working certificate, so the remedy is an accessible forum, sensitisation of the certifying authority and hiring-side intervention; for these communities the binding constraint is enumeration upstream of every scheme, so the remedy is a central list, documentation camps and a statutory commission, and applying either remedy to the other group would leave the actual constraint untouched. Qualification: the comparison must not homogenise the two populations, must record that a partially settled community holding backward-class status may gain a reservation while losing scheme-specific benefits, and must measure success by livelihood, education and freedom from discrimination rather than by certificates or enrolments.

Claim -> named evidence -> analysis -> qualification:

- This owner holds two distinct populations that the repository joins by one analytical thread rather than by one identity: transgender persons, whose claim is recognition of a self-perceived gender, and Denotified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic communities, whose claim is release from a colonial criminal label and entry into the documentation on which welfare depends; the owners state the shared structure as recognise identity, then prohibit discrimination, then deliver welfare, and they warn against homogenising the two groups because a transgender person can be socially visible while legally marginalised whereas a nomadic family can be administratively invisible because classifications, documents and State lists are fragmented. The audited routing ledgers route no General Studies Mains demand and no objective demand to this owner, so the package solves none and says so plainly instead of inventing one.

- The owners keep two certification routes apart. A District Magistrate issues the basic certificate recognising a person's self-perceived transgender identity, and no medical or surgical requirement applies to it. Section 7 separately permits a revised male or female certificate after medical intervention, which is an additional route and not a precondition for basic recognition. The distinction is the single most tested detail in this half of the topic, because an answer that says the Act requires surgery for recognition inverts the statutory scheme, and an answer that ignores Section 7 loses the reason critics describe the design as certificate-based rather than self-declaratory.
- The owners record the National Council for Transgender Persons as the body created under the 2019 Act, chaired by the Union Minister for Social Justice and Empowerment and including transgender community representatives, State nominees and ministry officials; they record its function as advisory and record expressly that it lacks quasi-judicial or enforcement powers. The examinable contrast is with a commission that can receive complaints, hold inquiries and issue binding directions, and the owners use that contrast to explain why declaration-stage recognition can coexist with delivery-stage failure.
- The owners set out the rest of the transgender failure chain in order: the complaint-officer route exists but awareness, independence and effective remedy are weak; Garima Greh coverage is limited in number and spread; and skill training exists without strong formal-employment linkage. They add the illustration of a person who holds a District Magistrate certificate in a smaller town and still faces housing discrimination with no local enforcement agency to approach, which converts an abstract enforcement gap into a locatable administrative absence that an answer can name.
- The owners draw a distinction that objective questions exploit. Denotification in 1952 repealed the criminal-tribe label and removed the statutory classification; it did not provide rehabilitation and did not remove social stigma. Decriminalisation in the sense of a wrongful-conviction remedy would have implied a finding and a reparative consequence, and the owners record that this did not occur. An answer that says these communities were denotified because they were declared innocent has replaced the repeal of a statute with an exoneration that never happened.
- The owners record the Development and Welfare Board for De-notified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Communities, constituted on 21 February 2019 under the Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment, as a welfare Board that undertakes surveys, coordinates scheme implementation and advises on policy. They then state the institutional boundary that the topic turns on: it is not a statutory commission with quasi-judicial powers, it can recommend but cannot compel State action, and the permanent statutory commission recommended by the Ldare Commission has not been enacted, so an answer that upgrades the Board into a commission has changed its legal character.
- The owners set out the invisibility chain in order: no central statutory list of these communities exists, so communities appear on different State lists or on none, fragmenting eligibility; nomadic and semi-nomadic ways of life mean families lack a fixed address, preventing issue of a ration card, Aadhaar seeding and a caste certificate in many States; and without documentation families cannot access the health-assurance, food-security or income-support schemes for which they are otherwise among the neediest. The owners add the migration case in which a community listed in one State moves to another where it is not listed and loses eligibility, and the overlap case in which a partially settled community holding backward-class status in a State may gain that reservation while losing scheme-specific benefits.
- The owners refuse a one-sided reform list. Certificate-based recognition secures official documentation but introduces a bureaucratic gate that critics argue weakens the self-determination principle the 2014 judgment affirmed. A dedicated scheme for denotified communities delivers targeted support but risks building a separate welfare silo instead of mainstreaming these communities into larger existing programmes. Advisory bodies such as the Board and the National Council avoid quasi-judicial complexity but lack enforcement teeth. The recommended corrections are a permanent statutory commission on the model of the existing constitutional commissions, a central list on the model of the central backward-class list, documentation camps for nomadic families, sensitisation and a dedicated enforcement route.

Qualified conclusion: Claim: the proposition holds at the level of mechanism and fails at the level of prescription, because both groups are denied standing before the welfare state, but one is denied a forum after being recognised while the other is denied recognition before any forum becomes relevant. Named evidence: the inclusive statutory definition, the District Magistrate certificate and Section 7; the prohibition, the complaint officer and the advisory Council; SMILE, Garima Greh and the skill component; against the 1871 Act and its 1952 repeal, denotification distinguished from decriminalisation, the fragmented State lists and absent central list, the domicile barrier to a ration card, Aadhaar seeding and a caste certificate, the Board of 21 February 2019 and SEED of 16 February 2022. Analysis: for transgender persons the binding constraint is enforcement and stigma downstream of a working certificate, so the remedy is an accessible forum, sensitisation of the certifying authority and hiring-side intervention; for these communities the binding constraint is enumeration upstream of every scheme, so the remedy is a central list, documentation camps and a statutory commission, and applying either remedy to the other group would leave the actual constraint untouched. Qualification: the comparison must not homogenise the two populations, must record that a partially settled community holding backward-class status may gain a reservation while losing scheme-specific benefits, and must measure success by livelihood, education and freedom from discrimination rather than by certificates or enrolments.

ORIGINAL MAINS 6 - 20 MARKS

Question: Assess what a state must build, beyond legal recognition, before an identity-based entitlement becomes a capability for the person who holds it. Answer in about 300 words.

Model thesis: Claim: legal recognition creates a claim, but a claim becomes a capability only when four separate pieces of administrative infrastructure exist, an identification route, a delivery route, a remedy route and an outcome measure, and Indian practice for these two populations supplies the first two more reliably than the last two. Named evidence: the certificate route and its discretionary gate; the prohibition and the establishment complaint officer alongside the absence of a local enforcement agency; SMILE, Garima Greh and skill training; SEED with coaching, health-insurance facilitation, livelihood and housing components; the Board that recommends without compelling; the absent central list and the domicile barrier; and the owners' instruction that success be measured by livelihood integration, educational attainment and freedom from discrimination rather than by a certificate or enrolment count. Analysis: identification failure excludes a person from every scheme at once, remedy failure converts a prohibition into an unenforced norm, and outcome-measurement failure allows an administration to report shelter and enrolment totals while stigma-driven exclusion continues in hiring and housing, so the sequencing of reform matters as much as its content. Qualification: the assessment should concede the trade-offs the owners state, that a certificate secures documentation while bureaucratising identity and that a dedicated scheme delivers targeting while risking a separate welfare silo, and should recommend a statutory commission and a central list as the first-order corrections rather than as an exhaustive programme.

Claim -> named evidence -> analysis -> qualification:

- This owner holds two distinct populations that the repository joins by one analytical thread rather than by one identity: transgender persons, whose claim is recognition of a self-perceived gender, and Denotified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic communities, whose claim is release from a colonial criminal label and entry into the documentation on which welfare depends; the owners state the shared structure as recognise identity, then prohibit discrimination, then deliver welfare, and they warn against homogenising the two groups because a transgender person can be socially visible while legally marginalised whereas a nomadic family can be administratively invisible because classifications, documents and State lists are fragmented. The audited routing ledgers route no General Studies Mains demand and no objective demand to this owner, so the package solves none and says so plainly instead of inventing one.
- The owners record that the 2019 Act prohibits discrimination against a transgender person in education, employment, healthcare, access to goods, facilities and public services, and the right to reside with family, and that it creates offences for specific harms including sexual abuse, denial of access to a public place and eviction; they record that an establishment must designate a complaint officer to deal with complaints. They then attach the qualification that a formal complaint route is not the same as accessible enforcement, because awareness, independence and effective remedy remain weak, which is why Section 3 is a starting point for an answer rather than its conclusion.

- The owners record Garima Greh as the shelter-home component providing accommodation, food, medical care, skill training and recreation, and they immediately state the limit: shelters address immediate housing and safety needs but do not substitute for long-term economic integration, and their number and geographic spread are limited so that transgender persons outside major urban centres may lack access. The livelihood pathway is the skill-development component, and the owners record that its linkage to formal employment remains weak because stigma persists in hiring, so a shelter count is not evidence of integration.
- The owners record the Scheme for Economic Empowerment of Denotified, Nomadic and Semi-Nomadic Communities, launched on 16 February 2022, as a dedicated central scheme with four recorded components: free coaching, health-insurance facilitation including a route through the national health-assurance scheme, community livelihood initiatives and housing or land support. They immediately record its boundary, that it is not a comprehensive substitute for documents and State-list recognition and that its coverage remains nascent, so the scheme answers a distributive need while leaving the recognitive and documentary need open.
- The owners set out the invisibility chain in order: no central statutory list of these communities exists, so communities appear on different State lists or on none, fragmenting eligibility; nomadic and semi-nomadic ways of life mean families lack a fixed address, preventing issue of a ration card, Aadhaar seeding and a caste certificate in many States; and without documentation families cannot access the health-assurance, food-security or income-support schemes for which they are otherwise among the neediest. The owners add the migration case in which a community listed in one State moves to another where it is not listed and loses eligibility, and the overlap case in which a partially settled community holding backward-class status in a State may gain that reservation while losing scheme-specific benefits.
- The owners refuse a one-sided reform list. Certificate-based recognition secures official documentation but introduces a bureaucratic gate that critics argue weakens the self-determination principle the 2014 judgment affirmed. A dedicated scheme for denotified communities delivers targeted support but risks building a separate welfare silo instead of mainstreaming these communities into larger existing programmes. Advisory bodies such as the Board and the National Council avoid quasi-judicial complexity but lack enforcement teeth. The recommended corrections are a permanent statutory commission on the model of the existing constitutional commissions, a central list on the model of the central backward-class list, documentation camps for nomadic families, sensitisation and a dedicated enforcement route.
- The audited 2018-2023 and 2024-2025 Mains routing ledgers route no General Studies question to this owner, the audited 2018-2023, 2024-2025 and 2026 Prelims routing ledgers route no objective question to it, and both the Basic and the Advanced owner state independently that no direct General Studies Paper II Mains question in the audited 2024-2025 papers names transgender persons or these communities. The package therefore records a transparent zero rather than claiming a route, treats the probable questions carried by the owners as anticipated framing rather than as previous-year questions, and supplies six original Mains answers and eighty original objective questions in their place; the outcome measure the owners prescribe is livelihood integration, educational attainment and freedom from discrimination rather than a certificate or enrolment count.

Qualified conclusion: Claim: legal recognition creates a claim, but a claim becomes a capability only when four separate pieces of administrative infrastructure exist, an identification route, a delivery route, a remedy route and an outcome measure, and Indian practice for these two populations supplies the first two more reliably than the last two. Named evidence: the certificate route and its discretionary gate; the prohibition and the establishment complaint officer alongside the absence of a local enforcement agency; SMILE, Garima Greh and skill training; SEED with coaching, health-insurance facilitation, livelihood and housing components; the Board that recommends without compelling; the absent central list and the domicile barrier; and the owners' instruction that success be measured by livelihood integration, educational attainment and freedom from discrimination rather than by a certificate or enrolment count. Analysis: identification failure excludes a person from every scheme at once, remedy failure converts a prohibition into an unenforced norm, and outcome-measurement failure allows an administration to report shelter and enrolment totals while stigma-driven exclusion continues in hiring and housing, so the sequencing of reform matters as much as its content. Qualification: the assessment should concede the trade-offs the owners state, that a certificate secures documentation while bureaucratising identity and that a dedicated scheme delivers targeting while risking a separate welfare silo, and should recommend a statutory commission and a central list as the first-order corrections rather than as an exhaustive programme.