Constructed-response practice and models

Transfer 1. Decode: "Efficiency is not the same as effectiveness."

Model answer: Efficiency concerns resources or speed; effectiveness concerns whether the intended outcome is achieved. The tension is between process economy and actual result.

Transfer 2. Write a qualified thesis for the same prompt.

Model answer: Efficiency is valuable, but it becomes meaningful only when faster or cheaper processes still deliver the intended and fair outcome.

Transfer 3. Give four distinct body moves.

Model answer: Define the distinction; show where efficiency helps; explain proxy/measurement failure; propose outcome-based safeguards.

Transfer 4. Repair the opening "Since ancient times, efficiency has been important."

Model answer: Open with the present tension: "An office can process files quickly and still fail the people it serves."

Transfer 5. Turn an example into analysis.

Model answer: After the example, state the mechanism and link: rapid complaint closure can reward disposal rather than repair, showing why speed alone is not effectiveness.

Transfer 6. Supply a genuine counterargument.

Model answer: Slow procedures can also harm citizens; therefore the answer is disciplined timeliness, not delay in the name of care.

Transfer 7. State the revision priority if the essay is 690 words.

Model answer: Cut repetition and duplicate examples first; preserve the thesis, counterargument and conclusion.

Transfer 8. Write a qualified conclusion sentence.

Model answer: Institutions should therefore measure efficiency by the resources saved and effectiveness by the fair outcomes actually delivered, treating neither as a substitute for the other.
