- breadth produced proposals of uneven precision and political feasibility;

- some recommendations sought constitutionalising solutions where practice/capacity was the deeper

- problem;

- later law may resemble, modify or reject a proposal without formally "implementing the NCRWC".

- □□ The best assessment is selective constitutional maintenance, not wholesale implementation. Test each proposal against basic structure, federalism, rights, democratic accountability and the current legal position.

MAINS ANGLE

Identity: the NCRWC was constituted by Government of India resolution on 22 February 2000, chaired by former CJI M.N. Venkatachaliah, and remained an executive, temporary and advisory body rather than a constitutional organ. Mandate boundary: it reviewed fifty years of constitutional working within parliamentary democracy and without disturbing basic structure. It did not exercise original constituent power or Parliament's Article 368 power. Report control: the eleven-member Commission adopted its report on 11 March 2002 and presented it on 31 March 2002. P.A. Sangma had resigned; the secretary and advisory-panel participants were not additional members. Recommendation status: the report's constitutional-amendment, legislative and executive routes describe how recommendations might be implemented. No recommendation became law by appearing in the report. Working framework: constitutional performance must be tested through text, statutes, institutions, conventions, parties, administration, federal consultation, legislative deliberation, rights outcomes and effective remedies. Implementation method: compare the exact recommendation with the later instrument and classify it as exact, modified, related, rejected, overtaken or pending. Similarity and sequence do not prove adoption or NCRWC causation. High-yield mismatch controls: the NCRWC proposed a 10% ministry ceiling, while the 91st Amendment uses 15%; its judicial commission was not the later NJAC and is not the collegium; its ECI appointment and anti-defection routes are not current law merely because reform debate continued. Current-law owners: Articles 200-201, the Tenth Schedule, election law, Parts IX/IXA, judicial appointments, RTI, Lokpal and disaster management must be stated from their current constitutional/statutory sources, not the report. Evaluation: the report remains valuable as a cross-institutional diagnosis and reform menu, but selective constitutional maintenance requires democratic legitimacy, feasibility, rights, federalism and basic-structure control. Official-source control, checked 5 September 2026: the Department of Legal Affairs and Inter-State Council portals remain the authoritative report repositories. No official consolidated implementation notification gives the report legal force. Routed constitutional-reform PYQs remain cross-owned.

Advanced · Constitutional maintenance versus constitutional replacement

GS-II Indian Polity

INTRO & ORIGIN

Maintenance preserves the founding settlement while repairing procedure, accountability and capacity. Replacement claims a new constituent mandate. The NCRWC's express basic-structure and parliamentary-democracy limits place it in the maintenance category.

HIGH

Advanced · Comparative evaluation

GS-II Indian Polity

INTRO & ORIGIN

Commission-based review can aggregate expertise and public consultation, but elected institutions must choose among contested designs. Courts police constitutional limits; they do not approve an entire reform report in the abstract. A sound answer therefore evaluates each recommendation through democratic legitimacy, federal impact, rights cost, administrative feasibility and reviewability.
